Dole pledge avoided by Thatcher

By Our Political Reporter The Prime Minister yesterday deliberately left open the possibility of a future cut in the real value of unemployment and other short-term benefits as a contribution to efforts to reduce Government spending.

Far from repudiating Mr Nigel Lawson, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for saying that the future value of benefit against prices could not be guaranteed, Mrs Thatcher went out of her way in the Commons to stress that the pledge given in the Conservative Party manifesto to "price protect" pensions and other linked long-term benefits did not apply to dole

Her statement that the question would not arise until fixed and announced, and her invitation to MPs to defer the dabate on the issue until then, left some back benchers convinced that Mrs Thatcher is willing to face a confrontation with the liberal wing of her party.

Cooservative backbench experts on social security believe that for "deindexing;; to have any significant effect on public spending it would have to apply also to the short-term rate of supplementary benefit, which the majority of unemployed people also receive. Only some 750,000 people receive unemployment benefit alone. It is pointed out that the restoration earlier this year of the Continued on back page, col 6 | 1980 5 per cent cost only £60m.

eral Workers' Union in the Isle of Man voted to press for a minimum wage of two thirds of national average earnings al-though union leaders, implacably opposed to incomes re-straint, emphasized that its introduction should not be underpinned by statute.

Yesterday's decision will be seen as a boost for the campaign for a minimum wage by those unions, such as the National Union of Public Employees, which have many low-paid members although their campaign is for a statutory minimum, a policy difference still to be reconciled with the TGWU.

Conference delegates also gave a strong reaffirmation of the TGWU commitment to free collective bargaining and rejected by a large margin a call for an agreement with a Labour government "on a policy covering prices and incomes as part of a genuine planned

Thirteen men from Belfast were being questioned about terrorist offences yesterday after they were arrested on the word of a "supergrass"

The men will be held until the police decide whether charges can be made, possibly later this week. Another 10 men allegedly named by the informer, are being sought by the RUC. The informer is a former member of the illegal Ulster Volunteer Force. The man's wife and child are believed to be in protective custody after disappearing from their home in the Shankhill Road area last

But other delegates argued that freedom to negotiate wages was basic to democracy and that incomes policies were always doomed to failure.

The move for the introduction of the national minimum wage was led by Miss Ann Pettifer, who argued that the problem of low pay would never be resolved without a minimum wage. She called for the TUC to campaign against government moves to repeal wages legislation

BP forced to cut petrol rise By John Witherow

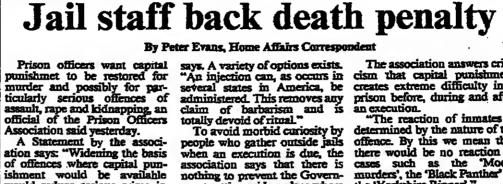

British Petroleum's increase of 8p on a gallon of petrol came to an abrupt end yesterday when the company was forced to cut prices to compete with its biggest rival, BP increased the price of a gallon of four star petrol to £1.87 on Monday and was followed by some of the smaller companies. But yester-day Esso, the market leader, announced it was raising prices by half as much as its competitors to nearly £1.84.

Within an hour BP had reluctantly followed, saying it must remain competitive and match Esso and that it hoped there would be price stability The only big company not to £1.79 yesterday was Shell, which is expected to announce today that it will increase the price to the lower level of £1.84. Texaco, Mohil, Amoco and Burmah had all followed BP's example and will now find themselves under almost intolerable pressure to reduce prices.

Esso said that its smaller increase would ensure the company made a profit on appropriate in a very competitive market. Like the other price increases, Esso's decision would remove subsidies

Research spending 'should be selective'

By Pearce Wright

Spending on research must be more selective because Britain cannot afford to explore every scientific nvenue or develop every technology, according to a government report published

It says that more effort is needed to achieve stable cooperation between government and industry for crucial "generic" technologies to be estab-lished, and to exploit the results of defence research for con cial purposes.

The report by Sir Henry hilver, Vice-Chancellor of Chilver, Vice-Chancellor of Cranfield Institute of Technology, and Sir Alec Merrison. Vice-Chancellor of Bristol University shows a total research expenditure in Britain nf £3,500m a year, of which the Government provides £1,650m. It also shows that Britain spends £18 a year for each person un defence research and £47 for civil research. The figures for West Germany are £4 and £73; France £12 and £47;

US £27 and £74; and Jupan nil Sir Henry and Sir Alec prepared the report as chairmen respectively of the Cabinet's Advisory Chuncil for Applied Research Cnuncils.

They say: "In the past it was possible to maintain a UK presence in the vast majority of areas of scientific inquiry; basic science was - at least by comparison with many applied science areas - a relatively cheap activity." But the scale nn which some fundamental scientific problems have to be tackled, in particle physics for example, means that Britain's resources must be combined with those of other countries.

Thatcher declines to give long-term dole pledge

PM'S QUESTIONS

Mrs Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister, questioned in the Com-mons about future unemployment benefit rates, said that as already announced, benefits would be increased by 8.7 per cent from November. She did not, she said, understand what the debate was all about. But she declined to pledge about. But she declined to pledge the Government to increase the benefit in line with inflation for future years. It was not a linked long-term benefit, she said, and therefore on pledge about protection had been given at the election.

uprating the value of the benefit would be higher than when the Conservatives took office.

Mr Greville Janner (Leicester West, Lah) asked: When she met her ministerial colleagues today did she discuss with them the iniquitous proposal made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to reduce the real value of unemployment benefit? Such a proposal would lack both compassion and common sense and adding to the suffering of the unemployed is no resolution whatever to the problems of the

Mrs Thatcher: The decisions on the rate of unemployment benefit which apply from this House by the Secretary of State for Social Services the other day in this Parliament. We are restoring the 5 per cent cut made in 1982.

That means in November the That means in November the standard rates of memployment benefit go up by more than 8 percent to £27.05 for a single person and 43.75 for a married couple. The rates have been fixed and announced in this House and I do not understand what the debate is about (I always intermediate). Mr Michael Foot, Leader of the Opposition (Blackau Gwent): When she told us she did not understand what the debate about unemploy-ment benefit was about, does that

Exchequer a few days ago that cutting the dole might enable nemployed people to get jobs?
The cots in dole which her Government has done have not had much success so far in getting any jobs. Mrs Thatcher: The point is a simple one. The rate of unemployment benefit which will be paid from the coming November to the following November has been announced to the House. It includes not only 3.7 per cent inflation but it restores the 5 per cent which was previously ent off. Therefore the unemployment following November has already The question does not therefore arise again until after the Budget next year, and probably until after the RPI figure is announced in June next year as to the rate for the following November. It seems in me it would be better to defer debate until then. (Labour interruptions).

If that policy as defined by the Chancellor of the Exchequer were carried out, it would mean a further increase in the numbers forced on to means-tested supplementary benefit, which are already a record total. Mrs Thatcher: During the election campaign, the manifesto pledge we gave was: "In the next Parliament we shall continue to protect retirement pensions and other linked long-term benefits against rising prices." Unemployment benefit is not a linked long-term benefit, as we duly explained, and therefore no longterm pledge about price protection was given. the unempt the amount which is paid out to penalized.

people who are unemployed is of the order this year of £5,500m. Something under £2,000m is actually paid out by way of unemployment benefit from the national meanance fund.

Therefore the majority of the unemployed obtain what they need by extra benefit from the social security system. This is precisely what it is there for.

Mr Foot: The Chancellor of the Exchequer talked about cutting benefits as a means of getting jobs.

Mrs Thatcher: I have indicated precisely what the position is. The relationship between unemploy-ment benefit and social security benefit and minimum wages and the wages actually paid is a source of great debate among academics considering them.

Mr David Winnick (Walsall North, Labl: Did she read the speech made by Mr Francis Pym? Will she bear his remarks in mind when deciding with ministerial colleagues whether or not the real value of unemployment benefit is to be cut? The remarks made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer with regard to unemployment benefit were heartless and contemptible and even more so bearing in mind that so many jobless are direct victims of the Government's own disastrous economic policies.

Mrs Thatcher: I have read the speech. I have made the position of unemployment benefit abundantly clear. Perhaps there is one point I did not sufficiently emphasize— after the November uprating, the value of the benefit will be higher

Mr Nerman St John-Stevas (Chelmsford, C): Her statement today on unemployment benefit is extremely welcome and has made the position clear because it would be unacceptable, I believe, to many people on this side of the House if the unemployed were to be further

When the child benefit increased in November to the amount announced in the Budget. that will also be a record amount.

More tenants get right to buy

HOUSING

The evidence that council tenants preferred to own their homes was even more compelling now than it was in 1978 when a survey showed that home ownership was the preferred form of tenure for 90 per cent of those under age 45 and for 61 per cent of those over that age, Mr Ian Gow, Minister for Housing and Construction, said in the Commons.
He was moving the second reading of the Housing and Building Control Bill which extends the right owns a leashold rather than a freehold. The measure, which was going through the Lords when Parliament was dissolved for the general election, also increases the discount from 50 per cent to 60 per cent for tenants of 30 years standing

Mr Gow said that during the last Parliament more than 550,000 tenants bought their homes under the right to buy or under voluntary schemes. There were more than 150,000 right to buy sales in the pipeline.

Those figures (he said) tell their own story. This Bill carries a stage further the principles which inspired the Housing Act 1980.

The Bill extended the right to buy to public sector tenants of leasehold property; public sector included not only local authorities, but new lown and housing association tenants. There were 50,000 such tenants in England and Wales and the Government saw no reason why they should be excluded from the right to buy.

The Government also proposed that the right to buy be extended to dwellings that had been adapted for use by the disabled. However, purpose-built and sheltered accommodation for the disabled would

The Bill introduced a new right to shared ownership because the Government was determined to give more opportunities for bome ownership to the less well-off tenants. Local authorities in new towns and housing associations had successfully operated such schemes proposing to give every public sector tenant who could afford even a modest mortgage the right to get their foot on the bome ownership ladder. This would be by part buying and part renting their homes with an initial share purchase of not less than 50 per cent. The present right to buy rules required that the purchaser must have been a secure tenant for three years. That was to be reduced to two end the discount scale would start at tell their own story. There would be a continuing need for public sector housing to let and not just for the elderly, disabled or one-parent families. Housing starts in the public sector this year were higher than last year.

Parts II and III of the Bill dealing with building control reflected the Government's belief that wherever possible the individual should enjoy greater freedom and choice a should accept the responsibility that went with it. These parts reflected also the Government's conviction that in many areas of policy partnership between public and private sectors rather than a municipal monopoly provided hope and opportunity for progress.

Mr Gerald Kanfinan, chief opposition spokesman on the environ-ment (Manchester, Gorton, Lab) said the Government's war against officialdom and state control took some remarkable forms. The aim of part II was to allow competition to blow across the arid wastes of building conrol inspection.

The Bill was so uncertain about the effect it might have that it went to great lengths about laying down procedures for direction when a local authority rejected certification issued by a developer on its own behalf. Instead of eliminating officialdom, the Bill provided for its duplication by confirmatory inspec-The Bill (he said) is a curious mixture of legislative provision for institutionalized negligence coupled with the most tortuous bureaucracy

All those procedures were tucked away in the least glamorous part of the Bill, although they were vital to

The glamorous part of the Bill dealt with compulsory sale of public sector houses but the central part of the last Bill, dealing with sale of housing charity trust porperty had gone. Housing adapted for the disabled was to be forcibly sold off.

That was a squalid proposal. The Bill was a cyaical exercise in political dogmatism buttressed by phony and dubious calculations.

Many people who bought houses under the 1980 Act were finding themselves in great difficulty in keeping up mortgage payments because they had lost their jobs and while councils might be willing to while councils inight be wining as solve their problem by buying back the houses, the minister was refusing to consent to that. Where the Bill was not vindictive, it was irrelevant. It did nothing to deal with the gigantic housing crisis facing Britain today.

The nation was suffering from an unprecedented housing crisis. By 1986 there was likely to be a shortage of $17,000 bosses. By 1986 sucrize of 17,000 comes, by 1980 there was fikely to be a shortage of 517,000 homes. Building material producers were forecasting that building for owner-occupation was

Eight million smokers decide it's better to kick the habit than kick the bucket.

The latest Government figures, published yesterday, show another dramatic fall in the number of smokers.

They are now very much in a minority.

In fact, there are already more ex-smokers in Britain than there are people in Sweden.

Over 8 million of them.

They no longer have a smoker's cough. They can walk, hike, swim and play tennis without fighting for breath.

They can taste food and smell flowers again.

Their teeth and fingers are free of nicotine.

Best of all, they've substantially lowered their risk of getting bronchitis, emphysema, cancer of the lung and heart disease.

They're free of the habit and its consequences.

But if the battle is being won, the war is far from over.

Smoking still kills 250 people a day.

In a year, it's responsible for eight times more deaths than road accidents.

So though it's a dying habit, it's still taking a lot of people with it.

If you're still a smoker, we hope these latest figures will encourage you to give up.

Many people have found it much easier to stop than they'd feared.

And if eight million people can do it, why not you?

If you'd like a free copy of our booklet 'So you want to stop smoking' just write to us at PO Box 410, London SE 99 6YE and we'll do the rest.

By the time the next Government figures come out, we hope you'll have become a non-smoker.

Bergman and Ingrid, his wife of 12 years, live far from the modern, planned communities of suburban Sweden, far from the conveniences of mass transportation.

To get to Faro, ooe must first fly from Stockholm to Visby, an ancient walled city of medieval churches and ruined choirs. From Visby, there is an hour's drive across Gotland, a rocky island. #### Berries and sour milk for lunch and Dallas at night

Bergman's daily schedule seems equally well ordered, if not a bit fanatical in its precision. He gets up every morning at eight and writes from 9am until noon. Lunch - which for the past 15 years or so has consisted of berries and sour milk – is followed by two more hours of work and a nap at 3pm. Before dinner, he takes a walk and after dinner watches relevision — he is especially fond of Dallas — or a movie from his large I omm collection.

Even if Fanny and Alexander is his last feature film, Bergmann hardly plans to abandon his hectic schedule. He will continue to work for television the medium that originally produced Scenes from a Marriage and Face to

Since the beginning, alongside his more public career in film, Bergman has maintained another one in the theatre. He will continue to stage operas and plays. He has adapted Molière's School for Wives for television, and plans to stage King Lear for Stockholm's Royal Dramatic Theatre.

It was during a rehearsal of Strindberg's Dance of Death there in 1976 that Bergman was arrested, in a highly publicized incident, for tax evasion. The charges were later dropped - the Swedish Government subsequently issued a formal apology but the director exiled himself from Sweden and moved to Munich.

At the time, the experience caused Bergman enormous traums, leading to a nervous breakdown. It oot only seemed a fulfilment of all his worst fears of humilitation, but it also meaot leaving the country he loved, although he did visit Farô from time to time.

Although he had made a pleasant ecough life for himself in Munich, Bergman desperately missed his home. One summer day in 1977, he remembered how the blacs in his garden used to explode into hlossom during that week in June. The same evening, he and his wife took a plane to Visby, then drove a car back to their house on Faro. The night was clear, he recalls. "And there was oo darkness, and we got here at midnight and were sitting outside the old house, looking and smelling the flowers. The next day we went back to Munich. That in a way is very strange, but somehow very Swedish."

his time away from Sweden was a dramatic gesture. He gradually spent more and more time on Faro, and is spending his entire summers again oo the island. After fulfilling some theatre commitments in Munich, he says he will return to Sweden for good. "For a long time, I didn't want to come home", he says. "But now in a few years I think I will return. I think it's time for Ingmar to go home."

"A backhand siam, probably the most difficult shot in tennis," said the purring BBC-2 voice. Then Barlow had made his remark. Then we begged him to elucidate.

"The most difficult shot in tennis," said Barlow, "is the underarm right-hand volley between the legs, undertaken while you are holding a wine list in the left hand and endeavouring to select a viotage.

The last and indeed the only time played this shot was in 1963 at Cannes, at a little restaurant called Jojo's, which only had about six tables but which oddly had its own tennis court. I was in the mixed doubles. It was not an ordinary mixed doubles, as I was playing with another man against two English girls."

A bit unfair, we commented. "It certainly was," reminisced Barlow. "We were 1-6, 3-6, 3-5 down in the third set. At that moment the waiter came out to say that our table was ready, and asked me to select a wine. No sooner had I taken the

He got the point, later the match, and later still the Scots' doctor's wife. Kenya was a bit like that, you know. Finally, the doctor strangled Simoo one night. With the same line, curiously enough. That's why they still talk about it." "My goodness!" interrupted BBC-2.

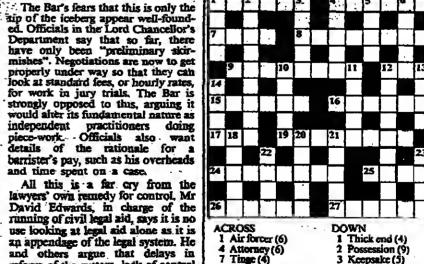

"Has anyone ever seen two chaps throw themselves about on a tennis court like this nair?" There were obligatory shots of two men lying prope on the turf.

"I have, as a matter of fact," said Barlow." Did I ever tell you of the Ome I was involved in the All-Jersey Championships, in 1968? There were two chaps against us in the doubles who chased for everything, as if possessed. Finally they both made a dash for one angled stam going way out of court, and crashed into the bushes. Not knowing the local geography, they did not realize it was a cliff-top court and both tragically fell 300 feet. But, and this was the extraordinary thing, one of them managed to hit the ball

Radical reforms are now being made by the Government in an effort to curb and control the escalating costs of civil and criminal legal aid and remove some of the system's accomalies. Oo the criminal side the Legal Aid Act was passed last year, providing for a number of important changes, details of which are being hammered out. Among them is the "right of review" of a refusal of legal aid, the absence of which has been called a blot on the legal aid scheme; the only national social service without such a right.

That, it is hoped, will counteract the disparities between courts in granting aid. Justices' clerks are to be given the power to refuse aid as well as grant it. An appeal against their decision can then be made to a panel of lawyers, the local legal aid Second, and more controversial, the act will change the way defendants pay contributions and the amounts they pay, increasing the amount of people paying towards their criminal costs from 7 per cent to anything up to 15 per cent and doubling from £2m to £4m the income derived from them. In place of the court's discretion

there will be new scales of contribution. A stricter means test will apply, like that in civil legal aid, with the spouses' income jointly assessed. The will be no upper limit however. The Government estimates that a defendant earning £92 a week, without savings, may have to pay £5 a week, while a married man with two children on £156 could pay £3.

But the scheme has been fiercly attacked by some lawyers, ootably the Legal Action Group, which says it will deter defence from seeking legal representation and mean wives paying for husbands accused of crime out of their earning, savings and child benefit allowances.

The Government is also to tackle what one MP called the "massive haemorrhage" on criminal legal aid: the huge costs in cases, such as largescale fraud, where defendants can afford to pay. It is proposing that courts employ a special examiner in such cases to make a detailed scrutioy of a defendant's finanances. But none of these reforms reaches the heart of the problem too many cases going to the crown courts.

There is wide support for bringing in section 48 of the Criminal Law Act 1977, which would oblige the prosecution to disclose its case to the defence before trial at magistrates' courts, as at crown courts. Many defendants, it is believed, would then oot press for jury trial. The police have been accused of digging in their heels over this unimplemented measure as being too-consuming. But Mr Tony Judge, of the Police Federation, says most would wel-come it. "No less than £25m (more than one third) of criminal legal aid was spent in 1981 on defendants electing crown court trial and then changing pleas", he says.

Oo the civil froot, the oeed for all legal aid applications to go to the Department of Health and Social Security for means testing is being reviewed. There is also support from the Legal Aid Advisory Committee and the Law Society for "coociliation" procedures to be made an integral part of early proceedings, so that more issues are settled out of court, thus cutting the matrimonial legal aid bill. But it is over payments to lawyers that some of the biggest reforms are proposed. Abuse and waste in the legal aid system inevitably draws attention to the few incompetent or corrupt lawyers and away from those dedicated to the scheme, who resent that their work has to be subsidized by private practice because of the low rates of pay.

The 3,000-member Legal Aid accepted there would be a disparity between private and state work, pay lèvels are now "insultingly low deterring lawyers from doing legal aid at all and creating "larger and larger areas of animet need".

Group, says that instead of diluting the total amount of legal aid money with a flat rate payment to all lawyers, there should be proper pay and incentives for those few firms who do a substantial amount of legal aid work. The government, however, wants tighter control across the board and has just brought in important changes in pay for criminal work. For solicitors there will be fixed criteria. set by the Lord Chancellor's Depart-and waste all stem from the present split responsibility of the legal system between the Home Office (criminal procedure and magistrates' courts) and the Lord Chancellor's Department (all other courts). The latter pays the piper but does not call the tune," he says. There is now growing support for the legal system to come under one department, namely that of the Lord Chancellor. Constitutionally, Mr Edwards says, it is wrong for Home Office, which is in charge of the police who prosecute, also to have control of the courts. The Government has just refused to after the structure "without consultation or reasons", he says. "But we are determined to reopen the issue."

talks to Ruth

Harris, American author and

self-made woman

When you are invited to interview Ruth Harris, the American novelist, her publicity people don't leave anything to chance. They send you a printed sheet containing Mrs. Harris's views on all the fashionable propers's criticate you could not ship. women's subjects you could possibly wish to discuss with her, plus the ones you might forget.

Normally, you'd chuck this away, since a nugget of fact or character or scandal mined from a hard-worked interview is worth a dozen handouts. But not in this case. After reading Ruth Harris on women and money (precis: "Why don't women feel easy with money - earning it, using it, investing it? It seems to me that while sex has come out of the closet, money is still considered dirty, not nice to talk about . . .") on having it all (precis: "For the last few years we've had gurus telling us to look out for number one, to he, connive and walk allover everyone clese to get ours. The me-first gurus could use a dose of self-confidence and generosity all of which nice people already have) on role models (precis: "I personally would like role models I cao relate to and Mary Wells, Chairman of Wells Rich Greene Inc. isn't it. The so-called role models the media shove at us are really like movie stars. I know damn well I'm dead if I try to look like Sophia Loren. If I try to look like Ruth Harris on a good day, then I have a chance...) and on much, much more. I felt as though Moses had personally passed me the tablets and

I'd agreed with every one. She looked like Ruth Harris on a good day when I met her at the Ritz in Piccadilly with her husband, Michael (he is a publicist and writes books, too) wearing a bright, red dress and the happy expression of someone about to indulge two passions. She adores travel and clothes and she is about to go to Plymouth, Manchester, Livepool and the Greek Islands, in that order, with wit and without anger or angst.

"My mother always worked, so a working woman just seemed natural to me," she says. "She was the oldest child of six in a poor family and she took herself off to mursing school in the Twenties, when women didn't do that kind of thing, and she ended up Supervisor of Nurses at a big, metropolitan hospital. She always said: Get married, by all means, hut do something, be somebody your-self and she said it in a very unangry way. I was brought up with two brothers so I like men. I think they're terrific, and whatever my problems are - like I don't write as well as I think I should, for instance - I don't blame men for them. Io the Fifties, when all my friends were comparing engagement rings, I wasn't interested in marriage. I was

Ruth and Michael Harris live in an apartment on 71st Street, Manhattan, with a bedroom, a living room and his and her studies, "We used to have a weekend place in the country, but I couldn't keep track of two refrigerators". They are happy because they share the same interests in travel and food and friends and movies and off-off-Broadway shows and just wandering around New York looking at life. An American magazine once ran a feature on them called The Twenty Four Hour Marriage. "We were photographed working together, going to the gym together, having our hair done together, eating together and going out to the movies together," Michael says. "The result, of course, was that everyone hated us, it all seemed so saccharine sweet". And Ruth says: "I just hope nobody tried actually doing it, that's all". In fact, they keep office hours, meeting occasionally for hunch and when Ruth gets into the tense, middle draft stage of a novel she works Is hours a day, seven days a week and because Michael is also a writer he understands this heavy typewriter duty.

Her books sell over a million copies a time in the States and she is often compared to Susann or Rohhins. Wrongly, since they deal with fantasy and a Ruth Harris novel is firmly based on fact. "I am absolutely fascinated by other people, by their lives, what happens to them and why", she says. "I am prepared to listen to anybody's life story and consider myself the ideal person to sit oext to oo a long plane

Her latest novel, A Self-Made Woman, is the result of an old friend calling her up, in tears, and saying: "Julie's getting married and I don't know what to do. She's only 22 and I keep telling her that she must get more established in her career before she even thinks of marriage. But you know how kids are, they don't listen".

Ruth says: "When she's stopped crying, I said to her. 'Does it occur to you that we've come 180 degrees from when we were Julie's age and a mother was more likely to weep over a daughter who hadn't married and settled down by the time she was

"Io America, lifestyles are pack-aged and sold like toothpaste and my friend and her daughter, have both been seduced by the myths of their generations. The mother defined herself as one man's daughter, another man's wife and somebody else's mother. Her heriones were the ladylike Grace Kelly or the girl-next-door Doris Day, her thinking was shaped by home-making magazines and romantic fiction, she was left adrift in a man's world without benefit of map or compass. The daughter come of age in the generation of women, her beroines were Gloria Steinem and Jane Fonda, she read Ms and Savry, she lived with her boyfriend for years before she married him and she took it for granted she could and would have it all marriage, career, childreo, success, love and work".

The book tells how both women realize they've been sold a lie and learn the truth about themselves, become self-made. Ruth Harris is wary of her title: "It's a gradual process that happens over the years". She is however, willing to pass on a couple of tips that help the process aloog. "Look at what you do well and think how you can expend it and do more of it. It may mean thinking back to the subject in which you were successful at school, or the thing everyone always compliments you on. My heroine, for instance, was a good cook and she eventually made a career as caterer. The other helpful idea is to look at something about yourself you don't like and change it. If you're bahitually late, try arriving on time and if you've been complaining about an extra 10lbs, lose it. Ruth Harris has cleverly dissected two generations of women in her books, so how does she see the new woman shaping up, the class of '87 or so? She hears, she says, worrying rumours from the suburhs that girls spend all their time talking about love and boys and rings. But I don't know. Really, I'm not a prophet. I have a hard enough time being a novelist." A Self-Made Woman. Ruth Harris.

My battles with the tax system have cost me dear. For years my husband begged the taxman to let me handle my own affairs instead of pestering him. Letting wives be responsible for themselves and taxed as single people might seem simple. But in the two and a half years since the Government published a report on the topic the arguments have slogged back and forth like a baseline rally. What should be done about the married man's allowance? Is it an outdated state subsidy to the nonearning wife? Why should the working couple claim both it and the wife's own allowance, too? Should it be replaced by higher child benefits?

Should the non-earning (I did not say non-working) wife be able to transfer her own allowance to her husband? No two women, it seems can agree on the subject, which is probably why we have had such a dotty and demeaning tax system for so long. Even God has his corner to fight. I received a letter from a vicar reprimanding me for suggesting that husbands and wives should be treated like single people for tax purposes. It undermined the spirit of Christian marriage.

What undermined it rather more, I suggested, was the present practice of taxing married couples jointly on their tovestment income, which resulted in much higher rates of tax. Was he aware that accountants advise their well-heeled clients to divorce? It is really not surprising that Sir

Foreign Office at the first decent opportunity. But elearly married women must keep a beady eye on the politicians. The new chancellor has already been advised by Mr Ronald Butt, in last week's Sunday Times, that his first economic priority is to change the tax system so married women are encouraged to stay at home to look after their families. Not that tax appears to have anything to do with the deplorable desire of married women to work. If it did, all the husbands would be lounging around at home sending their wives off in the morning for one of the cuter little tax anomolies is that the working wife supporting her husband gets more tax allowances than the working husband supporting his

Allow it to cool completely, then run a knife round the edge of the mousse before turning it out of the tin. Wrap closely in clinging plastic film and refrigerate.

I would rather see a slice of mousse on a bare plate than decorated with the obligatory lettuce leaf with, worse still, a slice of inappropriate tomato. What does go well with it, and looks really pretty into the bargain, is a tiny salad of lettuce and red or green chicory with slivers of peeled apple and toasted hazel nut. Before being arranged on the plates the leaves are tossed in light dressing of hazel and peanut oil Set the tin in a larger tin or mixed with a little fresh orange

Rearguard action

The Labour Party hopes to have four or five GLC by-elections this autumn which it will use to embarrass the Government over plans for the GLC's abolition. Among those who may stand down are the two GLC members recently clected to Parliament: Labour's Tony Banks, and the Conservative Marion Roe. There is no formal rule about GLC members who are also MPs, but hitherto parliamentary duties have taken precedence. The Strongbridge Hnusing Association scandal may produce further electoral casualties. Geoffrey Seaton, Conservative member for Surbiton, has already resigned after criticism of his role. Two other Conserva-tives, Harold Mote and Peter Black, have resigned their party whip and are under pressure from colleagues to leave the council. Labour would relish the by-election opportunities, though the four Conservatives all represent safe seats.

But what I heard him say on News at Ten, not once but twice, was not "decimated" but "demi-sated." To every good unionist, I am sure, demi-satiation is quite unacceptable.

Relief at last

Il is discomforting to hear that Dennis Buisson, one of two British birdwatchers arrested in Turkey for taking photographs in a military zone, will stand trial today without the pills urgently needed to control his gout. He was arrested five weeks ago. His wife arranged to have the pills forwarded by the Foreign Office and she sent them a month ago. The pills were still there yesterday. The Foreign Office has apologized, and promises they will now leave today.

Push hour

The Tokyo pushers, who shove commuters into rush-hour trains, have lost. Though official figures show that on the Johan rapid service, for example, the average load factor in each trian's ten carriages during peak bours is 274 per cent, the pushers cannot squeeze any more in. Happily Japan National Railways is cutting its freight train service in and around Tokyo. So now commuters will be put on to the freight network.

The January and February results, with growth rates roughly twice those of the closing years of the Brezhnov era, had led to speculation in the West that the new Soviet leadership's tough policy on labour discipline was having an effect. A modernized form of economic Stalinism had returned, and was proving successful. In the event, drawing far-reaching conclusions from a few months' results has proved very risky. But it is clear that the Soviet leadership must consider the fate of the Andropov experiment as crucial to what it calls the world balance of forces between "real

Soviet leaders fear that this gap will widen over the next decade. Soviet and East European growth rates have been slowing since the 1950s, when they were twice as high as in the industrialized West and Khrushehev's dream of overtaking the United States economically by 1972 seemed a real threat. Taking account of the fact that much of the investment in Warsaw Pact countries is ineffective, being investment for investment's sake, it can be

So far Moscow has been saved from the consequences of its economic failure by the depression in the West. But being a good Marxist, Mr Andropov knows that capitalism runs in cycles and that what has gone down is likely to come up. No such rosy prospect faces the communist countries.

Moreover, a growth in the gap between East and West could have serious internal repercussions for the Soviet Union. It would undermine the idea of the communist countries' inevitable ultimate victory, and so cast doubt on the central doctrine of Soviet foreign policy: that all Soviet gains, once completed, are irrevresible. Something urgently needs to be done to improve the Soviet bloc's economic performance. Economists from the smaller East European countries generally believe in the need for reforms that would introduce more market elements into the centrally planned economics. They are divided, however, on whether this can be done without far-reaching democratization.

Some believe that the introduction of market forces is fully compatible with the maintenance of political dictatorship. State-owned firms would compete in domestic and international markets, trying to maximze profits - and their managers bonuses. Discipline would be maintained by the secret police and, it is sometimes admitted in private, by fear of the unemployment that the reforms would briog. granted its charter by President Zia earlier this year, Many of the Imamat's health and educational services, which now include more than 200 health centres and hospitals and some 300 schools, were set up by the present Aga Khan's grandfather, using the proceeds of the "weighings" of his olden, diamond, and platinum ubilees. On these occasions, the Ismaili community did indeed weigh their Imam in gold, diamonds and platinum respectively, but that practice stopped when Prince Karim became Aga Khan, and there is no intention of reviving it. When at his headquarters at

Gouvieux, the Aga Khan normally works a basic 11-hour day from 9 am until 8 pm, often eating in the canteen with his staff. But in crises, which are not infrequent, he may be working from 4 am straight through until 2 am the next morning. His yacht and his skiing are his only two real forms of relaxation, and even then he will spend part of the day

One of the most Impressive features of the Imamat's activities is the extraordinary willingness of Ismailis, many not at all well-off, to devote their time and their money to the welfare not just of other Ismailis but of the whole local community in which they usually form only a tiny minority. The Aga Khan services are open to all regardless of race or creed. In Kenya, for example, non-Ismailis account for 95 per cent of the bed occupancy in Ismaili-funded hospitals and 70 per cent of the pupils to Ismaili schools.

"The sooner independent states are able to work together, to become nations and to think as nations, with people of diverse backgrounds, languages, and religious practices, the more stable those countries will become and the sounder the base for a democratic process. To create a sense of nannhnod is one of my priority objectives."

There is little doubt about his organizational ability and husiness acumen, but what about his primary role as spiritual head of the Ismaili community? He smiles. He knows that it is often hard for Christians to understand how private enterprise fits in with that role. Islam is an alleocompassing faith, he explains giving direction to every aspect of an individual's life. It urges the individual to lead a balanced life. one that strives to accommodate both material progress and spiritual well-being. But no one could hope to achieve that balance in sickness illiteracy or squalor. As leader of the Ismaili community, be believes that it is his duty to provide the basic health and education that are crucial to mankind's self-realization and spiritual growth. He agreed that he did not talk much about spiritual matters to western audiences; more, perhaps, to Muslim audiences. But that did not mean that it was not a dominant force in all that he did. "My life would be meaningless without my faith." be insists. "But I am not sure that a religious leader should talk exclusively about matters of faith. Faith should be demonstrated through actions."

MPs' pay: an issue for the voters

Last week I suggested in these columns that if the Tory backbenchers reelected Edward du Cann as leader of the 1922 Committee, this would presage fierce buttles over MPs' wages in the months and years ahead.

Well, he was reelected, and it now looks as though the first battle is days, rather than months or years away. We are told that the Cabinet is thinking in terms of a 4 per cent increase, whereas du Cann has spoken kindly of the Top Salaries Review Body's recommended 31 per

The higgest rebel vote I ever organized from the backbenches was in 1980 on this very subject. Norman St John-Stevas, as Leader of the Commons, had come np with a formula which, to my mind, smacked of indexation of our salaries to those in the Civil Service. I found this doubly objectionable, because I thought we needed to escape from the concept of comparability and because it implied that MPs should be insulated from the impact of inflation for which, in my book, we were primarily responsible.

We were voted down by the "payroll vote", but we mustered significant support, including that of Jim Callaghan. After the vote he told mc he had never before envisaged going into a lobby organized by me.

This time The Times has come out in favour of the 31 per cent by instalments. I disagree with the idea, not because of the likely effect of the likel such an example on pay-settlement levels in the coming pay nego-tiations – but because what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander. Parliament, having exorcised the ghost of "comparability" for others, should be the last group to succumh to the proposition that it needs to catch up with the Joneses.

Nor can the argument from market forces be lightly dismissed, at any rate by a majority party which is committed to their rejuvenation. There really is no evidence for the proposition that the quality of Parliament is currently diminished by the inadequacy of financial reward. Nor do I see anything deleterious about private members being "forced to look for extra-parliamentary pay". On the contrary, it seems to me a good thing that they should be. The nation suffers from full-time legislators: they pass more. laws than are good for us, and they have nothing to contribute from their working contacts with the world outside.

Ministers are a different maller altogether. Theirs is bound to be a full-time occupation; and though it may be true that few backbenchers will turn down promotion because of the pay (although some do from time to time), it is not unheard of for those who have taken office to be obliged to give it up to earn a decent livelibood. Besides, the present levels of ministerial remuneration are derisory by Victorian standards.

As to the backbenchers, the most compelling argument against a whopping increase is that when our legislators stood for office four short weeks ago they knew perfectly well the terms and conditions of employment. This is precisely the consideration that should point the way out of this perennial embarrassment for the future. I never had much patience with schemes to exonerate MPs from responsibility for deciding their own salaries: I do not believe it can be done.

Even if - which God forbid - the stipend for backbenchers were to be determined, as Norman St John-Stevas recommended, by a "baskel of comparators" (which sounded like the sort of conglomerate Gay Fawkes should have got to work upon), or some august quango created for the purpose, the requisite orders would require a parliamen-tary endorsement – and so they should. But there is, or should be, a better logic to the timing of their

The right time for fixing what MPs should be paid is immediately before an election. Then candidates could face their voters with a frank prospectus. Parliament would have just decided that the rate for the job was £15,000 a year - or £50,000 or £5,000 - and they could defend that rate or even, if they felt ohliged to, pledge themselves as individuals to take something less (or 10 demand something more). Indeed a legal obligation could be placed on every Parliament, before it was dissolved.

to pick the rate for its successor. Meanwhile the Cabinet should stick to its guns on the current wage claim. It might well be beaten; that is Parliament's sovereign right. But it would be better hy far far Parliament to impose a rate for its service in defiance of what the Government thought appropriate, than for the Government to negotiate a rate it was known to think inappropriate, and to take responsibility for its acceptance.

Why the police need policing

Sir Kenneth Newman, the Mctro-politan Police Commissioner, whose some degree; 53 per cent said the attack on left-wing activists last average police officer was racially week was criticized by The Sunday Times as "misjudged" and denounced by the Shadow Home
Secretary. Roy Hattersley, as "wild prople should not be dismissed as political comments", is no stranger to political controversy.

Last year, he caused a slorm by remarks he is allegded to have about the Jamaican community in an interview with the American journal, Police Magazine. In the Jamaicans, you have people who are constitutionally disorderly. . .it's simply in their makeup," it quoted him as saying "They are constitutionally disposed to be anti-authority." Though Newman subsequently denied that he had ever made these remarks, his interviewer. Bruce Porter, is adamant that he did and that he took detailed notes at the time to prove it. Porter, a director of the journalism programme at Brooklyn College, New York, and a former urban editor of Newsweek, is respected as a journalist-academic.

If wires were crossed on that occasion, as Sir Kenneth Newman now maintains, there is no dispute ahout what he said last week. What is open to exception, however, is not so much the spontaneous remarks that he made at the press conference which provoked such a public furore as the new doctrine of lese-majeste that he outlines in his annual report.

Newman makes a crucial distinction in this report between "debate restricted to the objective merits of the proposals for change" in the police force, which is acceptable, and what he calls, revealingly, "uneducated," criticism, which is not. Indeed, in his view, "unedu-cated" and "unfair" critics who encourage negative attitudes towards the police are a destablizing influence and a threat to public order", and should therefore be regarded as enemies of the people.

This line of argument has a depressingly familiar ring. The view that nuly "objective" criticism is permissible is the cornerstone of all authoritarian systems of control, whether they be on the left or the right, which suppress free speech in the name of the public good. It is the rationale for silencing "unscientific" criticism in China, just as it is invoked to silence "anti-social" opinion in Chile.

This logic also provides a convenient bolt-hole: negative attitudes are created by trouble-makers and require no further response except to deal with them. Nevertheless, the Commissioner would be well-advised to consider more carefully evidence of public dissatisfaction with some aspects of the police. A national poll by NOP in October 1981 found that almost one in four people said their confidence in the police has decreased in recent years. A subsequent opinion poll of Londoners conducted by the Opinion Research Centre in October 1982 revealed still more critical people should not be dismissed as the dupes of ultra-left propaganda: they are responding to aspects of the police force which are a genuine ground for concern and which call for constructive reform.

The Metropolitan Police Force has become increasingly divorced from the local population it serves. From being organized around beat patrols by constables with close links with the local community, the Met has become a motorized and highly mobile organization with a pro-fessional, technological support fessional, technological support system without real local roots. In order to offset this distancing of the police from London's local com-munities, the Met should be subject to the democratic control of both the GLC and the local London boroughs.

Effective democratic accountbility would provide a spur to a vigorous rooting-out of any residual corruption in the police force. The remarkable World in Action programme last August, in which former chief constables of Dorsel and Devon and Cornwall and a former inspector of constabulary all testified to the corruption in some parts of the London force, rather uncomfortably indicates that action against corruption has not been successfully concluded by the Countryman inquiry. A genuinely independent police ombudsman also needs to be established so that complaints against the police can be adequately dealt with.

Local authority control of the police would also help to improve he sometimes antagonistic relationship between the police and members of local ethnic communities. Though the causes of this antagonism are complex, the experience of living in Brixtoo for most of the last seven years convinces me that one contributory factor is the openly racist attitude of some policemen. (As one officer told the man living in the flat below ours, in full earshot of neighbours trash and black scum - thats' all who live round here.") The Home Office should also belatedly accept the Scarman recommendation that racist behaviour be made an offence under the police discipline code.

Of course, many of London's policemen are humane, caring and conscientiously neutral upholders of the law. They belong to a force that is inspired by a genuine sense of public service. Bul at a time when the policemen's job is being made increasingly difficult by the tensions caused by rising unemployment, a close relationship between the police and the public becomes all the more essential for the maintenance of law and justice. The development of this partnership was not best served by Sir Kenneth Newman's inflammatory political intervention last week. attitudes. A total of 87 per cent . #### SCIENCE BASED SOCIETY ogical development are activiics specific to the mixed econmy. They form a context in which generalized debate about public versus private is at its east illuminating. If state agenries took over the whole reinevitably lack applicability and profitability at the product end of the spectrum. If research were "privatized" wholesale most basic scientifie research and much highly generalized applied science would cease to be done. It is too expensive and its utility is 100 remote or uncertain for it to be justifiable expenditure in a corporation geared to profit. Yet if product research is to maintain its fertility it bas to be fed from research in basic science and generie technologies.

The state and private enterprise are very much in this thing together. The latest full set of figures is for 1978 (amazingly). Of the £3,500 million then spent on research and development the government provided about half.
Three quarters of that half, nearly one third of the total, was directed to defence. The value of the spin-off from defence to civil industry is much argued over. It may be noted that our three most formidable competitors among the industrialized nations of the free world, the United States, West Germany and Japan, all spent substantially more per head of population on civil research and development, The United Kingdom is an Scientific research and techno- (oil, the exception, being temporarily plentiful but finite). We stand at a time when the advent of several new technologies, of which micro-electronics is the most conspicuous, have already begun to revolutionize industrial society. These facts of our condition lay upon us a strict requirement to sustain an expanding effort in research and development all along the line from basic science to product design, and to acquire the habit of being receptive to its results.

Whether the effort is now large enough may be doubted after several years of public retrenchment and industrial recession, and when set beside that of other advanced industrial countries. It is also donbtful if the effort expended is as well directed as it could be. And it is certain that industry in its methods and its products is insufficiently receptive to the changes technological innovation dictates and the opportunities it offers.

The joint report by the chairmen of the Government's two princpal advisory bodies in this field reviews some of these matters. Its appearance in this form itself marks an improvement in as much as it offers for the first time joint consideration from the point of view of the research councils and from that of the administration of industrial R and D.

This report rightly lays emphasis on the need for stable long-term funding, and it is particularly disappointing that the universities were hit when the benefits of linking universities, government and industry in research and development programmes were coming to be recognized.

The report also dwells on the need for greater selectivity in committing the funds available. In pure and applied science the range is now so vast, the cost se high and velocity so great that choices must be made, some lines backed to the neglect of others, with the attendant risk of blunders and missed opportunities. In basic science these choices are left largely to the practitioners: the institutional arrangements may not be perfect but the choice is with the right people. Elsewhere in the research spectrum the question who is to make the choices of what to parsue and what to discontinue is less easy to answer and just as important to get right. #### FROM MADRID TO BERNE

The Madrid conference is President, are in a very delicate drawing to a close in much the same way as it began long months ago in September 1980: with bitter disagreement on the question of human rights. Since party oligarchy. Having now the USSR has been violating the accepted most of the Spanish principles of the Conference on proposals on human rights, they Security and Cooperation in are still prolonging the proceed-Europe (CSCE) from the very moment of signing the Helsinki Final Act in 1975, it might well be argued that further agreements will have equally bitle 1986. lt would also be wrong, however, to permit the USSR to change the emphasis of the a disarmament conference devoted to empty rhetoric on the arms negotiations at Geneva and Vienna are regarded by many as more important than the Madrid conference because failure to make progress results in the expansion of already excessive military budgets and could have even more dire consequences. Yet disarmament talks deal with the results of East-West tensions. not their causes, while the issues debated so heatedly at Madrid go to the heart of the differences now dividing Europe: should the demands of a regime take priority over the rights of an individual citizen? ln an ideal society, conflicts between the state and the citizen are rare and are settled quickly by a fair compromise between freedom and obligation to society. Soviet delegates at Madrid, who include Igor Andropov, the son of the USSR position precisely because they represent not the wisbes of the majority of their population, but rather the demands of a small ings by refusing to agree to a human contacts conference on family reunification and similar matters, to be held in Berne in Soviet delegates wanted the contacts meeting to remain an informal obligation, mentioned CSCE so that it became largely in the chairman's concluding statement, while the US representatives insisted that it be desirability of peace. The present incorporated in the final document. This is no mere quibble but an essential matter of gaining full recognition for the importance of the humanitarian clauses in "Basket Three" of the original Helsinki accord. Without a formal agreement.

there would be a strong risk that the USSR would refuse to attend the Berne meeting. This reluctance to discuss humanitarian issues bas been the main obstacle to reaching a conclusion at Madrid In March a draft agreement prepared by the neutral countries at the thirtyfive nation talks was accepted by Nato members after the neutrals had allowed important amendments on human rights. The USSR denounced the amendments and told its allies to do likewise. In June, however, the Romanians accepted and, after the Spanish compromise proposals, the Hungarian and Polish governments indicated their willingness to sign. Last Friday the USSR finally declared itself ready to yield substantial ground, but held out against the Berne meeting.

The discussions causing the greatest trouble at Madrid bave involved the principle of free flow of people and information. Moscow continues to jam those radio broadcasts from the West which the regime regards as interference in Soviet internal affairs". A system based on censorship cannot allow alternative sources of information, nor can it allow its citizens to travel abroad. This is why the term "defection" is used to describe the decision of the violinist Viktoriya Mullova to live in the West - a decision already taken by thousands of Soviet citizens, ranging from outstanding musicians, dancers, writers and scientists to ordinary sailors: the one thing they all have in common is that they had an opportunity to opt out of the Soviet society, and seized it.

Soviet spokesmen can argue that their system has advantages such as freedom from unemployment, and that those who are educated at the expense of the community should repay it by remaining to contribute their talents, rather than seeking greater rewards elsewhere. But until the peoples under communist regimes have a greater say in their country's foreign and domestic affairs; dangerous East-West tensions will continue. That is why Western negotiators must persevere on the issue of human rights.

Yet they will win the battle within Labour's ranks only if they wage it with more daring and resolution than in the past few years. That will depend a great deal upon who becomes the next leader of the party. It will always be possible to argue that Labour has many unilateralists among its activists and that party unity needs to be preserved. But it can be preserved at all costs only by sacrificing the confidence of the wider electorate. The challenge for Labour now is no longer to be obsessed with its own internal troubles, but to look outward and to speak to the country as a whole. The authors of this statement have shown how this can be done in one critical area of policy.

Parliamentary pay Implications in N Ireland of hanging and presumption

From Sir Woodrow Wyatt

Sir, I disagree with your leading article of July 4 on parliamentary pay. When I first went into Parliament in 1945 the MP's salary was £600 a year. There was no secretarial allowance, no living away from home allowance, no free travel for wives, no free telephone, though we did have a locker with a key to put our papers in. Yet many would argue that the quality of MPs in the 1945 Parliament was at least as good as that of those in the present Parliament, if not better, Allowing for inflation, that £600 would today be £6,810. The present MP's salary is £14,510, to which must be added a living-away allowance of np to £5,674, a secretarial allowance of up to £8,820, free telephones, and 15 free journeys for one's wife. Yet MPs, many of whom have only been in the job for three weeks, are now demanding up to a 30 per cent rise for a very part-time job.

. The great Herbert Morrison used to maintain that MPs should have work outside the House to keep them in contact with what life is all about. He was right. Those who try to make the Commons a full-time job are revolving on their own axis.

The fight against inflation is far from over. That MPs should be demanding increases in November is grotesque. By 1945 standards they are handsomely paid already.

How can the Government exercise the vitally needed pay restraint if MPs set such a rotten example? They knew the pay and conditions before they applied for the job and there are many thousands of equal, or better, quality willing to take their places if they now find they don't like them.

Sporting boycotts

From the Bishop of Liverpool

Sir, David Miller wrote in his two articles in The Times (June 8 and 9) that the sporting boycott has reached the absolute limit of its effectiveness and is about to become rapidly counterproductive. The evidence he quoted came from four Whites, four Coloureds, one Indian and one black South African. Like so many British sportsmen and husinessmen he discussed with many more whites and coloured people rather than with black people themselves what would help the 75 per cent of South Africans who are black.

Mr Carlisle and the other MCC members, who are calling for an MCC team to go to South Africa, sporting contacts, have confirmed that full integration now exists both on and off the cricket field."

All my contacts with South Africans during the last year lead me to believe that the changes which have taken place are very modest and do not affect the majority of hlack people. All the black South Africans I know have consistently asked for the sporting boycott to be maintained. Some have also pressed that there should be a trade boycott. Those who disagree with that on the grounds that black South Africans would be most hurt by it, have urged us to confinue the sporting boycott.

I salute the courage of white sportsmen who have stood up on this issue. They know that making substantial progress will need long perseverance. I have to note that they have only stood up since the sporting boycott has been enforced. It should not be lifted until nonracial sport becomes normal at every level from schools upwards. Such sporting opportunities should not rest on someone's nod or good will hut on firmly established rights.

Your Cricket Correspondent repeatedly suggests that it is only Third World political leaders who oppose the resumption of inter-national sport with South Africa. I must assure him that much respon-sible Christian leadership both inside and outside South Africa opposes it. For example, the Southern Africa Catholie Bishops' conference at the time of the 1981 Springboks' tour to New Zealand said that to lift the boycott would be to sacrifice one of the few peaceful levers for change in South African

I hope that members of the MCC will not ignore this on July 13. And I hope they will stand for a straightforward principle: the tradition of sport does not accept racial barriers. That's why sportsmen have refused to play against South Africa. That is why the pressure that the sporting boycott brings should be maintained

Sale of venison From Dr John Fletcher

Sir. I believe that "the flavour associated with venison" referred to by Mr John Lawless (The Times, June 29) is none other than putrefaction. The red deer of Scotland which produce about 75 per cent of Britain's venison are called when, by agricultural standards, they are aged, often more than 10 years old; they would be uneatably tough unless partially decomposed by hanging. Further gamey flavour arises from the wound caused by the bullet and inadequate bleeding. It is an inevitable consequence of meat which is a by-product of a sporting industry and in no way reflects on the enthusiasm, skills and dedication of the hard-worked stalker.

Nevertheless this reek of decay associated with venison is a new thing. When venison was produced in our deer parks, and Professor Centor has estimated that medieval England had nearly 2,000 such parks, then unquestionably the deer could be grown more quickly, and killed when younger, than is the case on our hills.

The Highland red deer have been forced into that barren high country by man's need for the better ground and he has then removed their shelter by felling the trees around them. Probably this spring some areas of Scotland will have lost 75 per cent of their deer calves and 25 per cent of their total stock hy starvation and exposure, for these deer are close to the northern limit of their world range.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

From Mr William McDowell .

Sir, Today a Protestant UVF man has been charged with shooting dead the Roman Catholic caretaker of Methodist College Preparatory School as he lay in his bed last April. One wonders if J. C. Beckett and his eminent colleagues (July 2) feel that the hanging of this UVF man, if convicted, would fuel "anti-British sentiment in Ireland" and "bring about the alienation of a large part of the middle ground"?

J. C. Beckett and his colleagues have unfortunately reduced the contemporary Ulster problem to a nineteenth-century-style nationalist struggle against the British. It is, of course, in reality a much more complex phenomenon. The struggle is one for civil order, consensus.

democracy, and self-determination.

The judicial hanging of those who have committed awful murders whether their political motivation was grounded in the Unionist, Republican or Ulster separatist tradition - would be the explicit statement of intent to win by the Government in this struggle which my society so desperately needs. I remain, Sir, your obedient servant, WILLIAM McDOWELL

loomfield. Belfast

From Professor Anthony Clare

Sir, Given the concise, persuasive case argued (July 2) by Professor Beckett and his colleagues against capital punishment, with particular relevance to the Northern Ireland troubles, why is it that so many people believe that the reintroduction of hanging would be helpful? One problem appears to be that sane, sensible and moderate people who themselves love life and have no great desire to die have little difficulty imagining the deterrent potential of capital punishment. These same people then conclude that the terrorist, being only human, shares their view of life and death.

But what makes today's heartless humourless and pitiless political fanatic so dangerous is precisely the fact that he does not regard life and death in this way at all. Left out of this simple equation is his unshakeable belief in the revolutionary cause and solution and if death itself is required to advance both, then so

The long-term effects on the recipient of technical assistance involving fieldwork or local projects hy contract are seldom, in my experience, as good as those of direct aid because of the natural desire of the contractor to finish the job and be paid. This makes it difficult for him to include in a project the frustrating and often unpredictable task of training local staff and giving them increasing managerial responsibility.

Contracts are finished quickly and often well, hus they tend to use sophisticated instruments and seldom leave behind suitable equipment or enough experienced and trained local staff to maintain the results or take any pride in the task. Yours faithfully, JOHN WRIGHT, Wehbs Farmhouse,

Burton's tomb

From Mrs Rosalind Whitworth Sir, Last Sunday I paid a visit to Sir Richard Burton's famous tent tomb at St Mary Magdalene's church at Mortlake. This tomb, which, I understand, is still regularly visited, particularly in the summer months, stands in a very neglected church-yard, and is in itself hard to locate.

At some later stage another burial has taken place at the rear, and this has to be negotiated in order to climb the iron stair to view the interior of the tomb, which is now unfortunately surrounded by undergrowth.

Considering how unique this monument is, and the tributes that are being paid at the moment to this eminent authropologist, it seems ironic that nobody has seen fit to maintain his exotle grave, Yours faithfully, ROSALIND WHITWORTH 9 Tite Street, Chelsea, SW3.

It is to his eternal credit that Mr

In doing so he rightly put the nation's interests above considerations of personal incompatibility. As a complete outsider, t formed #### party policy From Lord Diamond penalty. Northern Ireland has, over the Labour peers and

Sir. The public argument about new Labour peers is as confusing as it is unseemly. The Labour Party is committed to the abolition of the House of Lords on the ground that it has no necessary function to perform, This proposition has never enjoyed any real support among existing Labour peers, who are, of course, aware of the unique contribution to the government of the country made by the House of

Does the request for a substantial number of new Labour peers mean that there is a movement afoot to change party policy? Have the trade union leaders, who voted solidly for abolition, let it be known that they have been persuaded to the contrary view by the many ex-trade union leaders who, as peers, make such a valuable contribution to the work of the House of Lords?

If oo such movement is afoot is the request to be interpreted as an attempt to increase the total number of votes in Parliament favouring abolition? Is that how the new Labour peers will be expected to act? The Trojan horse provides a clear precedent of great antiquity; but will they individually have both a clear view and a clear conscience as they take the oath before taking their

Amid this welter of confusion it is fortunate that the duties of her Majesty's loyal Opposition in the Lords can safely be left to the Alliance peers, as was shown in the recent debate on the Queen's Speech. On that occasion, as the figures correctly reported by The Times demonstrated, the number of Liberal and SDP peers voting for the Alliance amendment exceeded the number of Labour peers voting for the Labour amendment by eight. By a strange coincidence that is exactly the number of new Labour peers being sought, according to latest reports.

US monetary policy that a return to the death penalty

From Professor J. E. Meade, FB.4 Sir, In his article, "Debt: the cancer cating into the US economy" (June 22) Mr Congdon dramatically illustrates the horrific effect of a persistent hudget deficit in conditions on which there is a high rate of interest. Compound interest on the national debt causes an explosive rise in the interest hurden on the budget, and so in the hudget deficit. and so in the national dehi itself on which the interest is being com-

The cure, as Mr Congdon argues, calls for a reduction in the budget deficit. But it calls also for a reduction in the rate of interest. A less relaxed hudgetary stance (for example, a reduction in current government expenditures) will in itself have a deflationary effect on the total money demand for goods and services; and this would make it possible to have a more relaxed monetary policy, with lower interest rates stimulating expenditures, with-out any net inflationary effect on total expenditures. Remedial action on the deht cancer would than rely on both hlades of the surgeon's scissors: a smaller current deficit combined with a lower rate of interest on the national debt.

The US economy is sufficiently large for its policymakers to be able to choose an appropriate mix of fiscal and monetary policies. Unfortunately in an open economy smaller countries, such as the UK, are not able to choose their own mix with such complete freedom since the international flow of capital funds will impose a serious strain on their balances of payments if they attempt by a more relaxed monetary policy to maintain interest rates much below those ruling in the USA. The choice of the appropriate mix of fiscal and monetary policies in the USA is of crucial importance for the world economy. Yours faithfully,

Wayward water

From Professor Joseph Black

Sir, Mrs Speight (July 2) has described very accurately her obser-vation of 'two simultaneous small vortices, one clockwise and one anticlockwise, divided by a smooth flow of water". This effect was also observed by Leonardo and brilliantly illustrated by him in "Studies of water formation," drawing No 12660 (1507), Windsor Royal Library. This shows clearly a jet of water cascading down into water at rest, with the resulting two opposing circular motions.

Attractive though her deduction is that the Equator runs north and soulb through Berkshire, I am afraid that the explanation is much simpler. When a jet of water has to move within a body of water at rest, or in slower motion, there arises a shearing force acting along each boundary of the jet this force induces a rotating motion or vortices which act as "rollers".

INTRODUCTION

DPCE is a market leader in the independent maintenance of a wide range of computer systems requiring highly reliable and sophisticated servicing by engineers on site and/or on call, often on a 24 hours per day basis. It also provides a range of other engineering services to users of computer systems, including the sale of training programmes and equipment.

DPCE operates mainly in the UK and The Netherlands. In both countries its principal maintenance contracts are with leading national and international organisations whose extensive use of sophisticated computer hardware supplied by a number of manufacturers makes reliable servicing arrangements imperative.

The business carried on by DPCE originated with the formation in Australia in 1971 of Data Processing Customer Engineering Pty. Limited ("DPCE Pty."). In 1972 DPCE Pty. was acquired by Dier Computer Corporation Limited, an Australian leasing company, which in turn was acquired in 1977 by Datronics Corporation Limited, a company listed on the Sydney

DPCE Pry.'s first major contract, to maintain the terminal network for Ansett Airlines, was awarded in 1973. The following year it negotiated a long term contract to maintain the computer network installed on the central site of Qantas, the national airline of Australia. DPCE Pty. continued to expand in Australia, winning contracts from leading institutions including the Sydney Stock Exchange, Reader's Digest and the Australian Department of

In 1976 DPCE Pty, won its first major overseas maintenance contract following an invitation from British Airways ("BA") to undertake a hardware audit at Heathrow, one of its two principal computer sites, and then to tender for the maintenance contracts for the sites both at Heathrow and at the West London Air Terminal. Having been awarded the contract, DPCE Pty. set up a UK division to provide the necessary maintenance services at the two sites, which hardware manufactured by different companies.

From this demanding and exciting beginning, and with the introduction of a new management team in 1979, the UK division quickly expanded its customer base, signing contracts with, among others, British Telecom, University of Exeter and Coventry City Council. In 1980 DPCE won its first maintenance contract in The Netberlands, for KLM Royal Dutch Airlines N.V. (*KLM*). DPCE's rapid growth has resulted not only from the award of contracts by new customers bot from increased levels of business with a number of existing customers. The table before demonstrate the results of the business with a 1977. table below demonstrates the growth of the business since 1st July, 1977: 1978 1979 1980 1981 1982 1983

In April, 1981 DPCE's management, together with a consortium of UK financial institutions led by Thompson Clive & Partners Limited and Candover Investments Limited, formed the Company to acquire DPCE (UK) Limited ("DPCE (UK)"), which comprised the UK and Netherlands activities of DPCE Pty.

BUSINESS Services offered

DPCE's principal activity is the provision of a maintenance service under contract to users of computer equipment, including central processing units, peripherals and distributed networks.

Over 90 per cent. of DPCE's revenue is derived from this source. DPCE has developed a concept of total systems maintenance whereby the service is structured to accommodate the specific needs of customers, to avoid the problems that frequently develop in mixed equipment installations, and to enable customers to obtain the maximum serviceable life from their computer systems. The directors believe that DPCE is the largest independent group ontside North America according a service of the North America providing a service of this nature.

DPCE provides extensive training facilities for its employees and bas developed training programmes for sale to customers and equipment manufacturers. It sells computer equipment, primarily to customers with maintenance contracts, and undertakes computer hardware audits which provide customers with advice on the serviceability and reliability of their existing

Contractual arrangements

DPCE obtains contracts either following negotiations with potential customers, or, in the case of government or quasi-governmental institutions, through competitive tender.

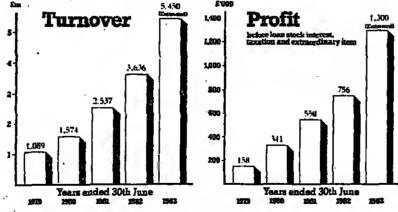

The duration of the contracts ranges from one to ten years but is typically for an initial period The duration of the contracts ranges from one to ten years but is typically for an initial period of between two and five years, continuing thereafter subject to a period of notice on either side. At 1st June, 1983 the total monthly charges receivable under maintenance contracts amounted to approximately £470,000. Of this total, 32 per cent, was in respect of contracts with over three years to run before the end of the mitial period. The contracts stipulate the range and extent of the service and provide that DPCE's personnel will be available for specified periods of up to twenty-four hours per day to provide both routine maintenance and emergency breakdown services. The contract charge, which generally includes the cost of all necessary spare parts, is subject to price escalation over the life of the contract, usually based on Government wage indices. Currently DPCE maintains equipment made by over 120 different manufacturers ranging from older generation machines such as the ICL System 4 to those incorporating the latest technology such as National Advanced Systems NAS 9060 (Hitzchi).

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION

The following information is derived from the full text of the prospectus and accordingly must be read in conjunction with that text.

Business: DPCE is a market leader in the provision of manufacturer independent computer maintenance services, primarily under contract, to leading national and international organisations. Its ancillary activities include training, hardware consultancy and supply of equipment. The Company bas two operating subsidiaries, one in the United Kingdom and one in The Netherlands.

Suppliers

In order to maintain supplies of the parts necessary to keep computer equipment fully operational, DPCE maintains tracing relationships with computer manufacturers, original equipment manufacturers, plug-compatible equipment manufacturers, component and subassembly manufacturers, and computer dealers and brokers. DPCE has access to suppliers not only in the UK and Europe, but also in the USA. As additional tources for parts, it purchases new and second-user equipment and refurbishes sub-assemblies.

Major customers The quality and sophistication of DPCE's maintenance service is such that its customers are principally major companies or public sector institutions which are heavy users of computer

The original BA contract, which at 1st June, 1983 was contributing about 28 per cent. of contracted revenue, was originally awarded for a period of three years, but was extended in October, 1978 for five years from that time, continuing thereafter subject to six months' notice on either side. BA has expressed its complete satisfaction with DPCE's performance, and the directors are confident that while DPCE maintains its present standards BA will continue to use its services. BA has awarded DPCE a further contract at a third site, at Bealine House, Ruislip. for an initial three year period from 1st January, 1982.

National Girobank awarded DPCE a contract for an initial five year period, which commenced in May, 1982, to provide a service on site at Bootle, Merseyside to maintain document reading ment. Since commencement significant additions have been made to this contract and further additions are expected.

In December, 1979 British Telecom awarded DPCE a one year contract to maintain its London Airport Cargo E.D.P. System ("LACES") at Heathrow and Gatwick. On expiry of that contract, it awarded DPCE a contract, expected to contioue for ten years, to maintain its ACP 80 system, which was the successor to LACES. The revenues from this contract have increased substantially since its commencement. Further British Telecom contracts followed for the maintenance of systems at Harmondsworth and Leeds.

In January, 1980 KLM awarded DPCE a contract to maintain part of its central site at Amstelveen in The Netherlands. As a result of successful performance, DPCE was awarded a contract for an initial five year period to provide an on site and on call service to maintain all of the central site equipment. An additional contract was awarded with effect from 1st January, 1983 to maintain the KLM Cargo computer system at Schiphol Airport.

As at 1st June, 1983 the contracts described above were generating some 60 per cent. of

In June, 1983 a major UK food retailer awarded DPCE a substantial contract for an initial three year period for the maintenance of its central computer systems.

Sales and marketing

DPCE's marketing technique is to approach prospective customers with a view to making a presentation leading to a formal proposal and the negotiation of a maintenance contract. DPCE does little advertising as it considers that a direct approach to selected prospective customers is more cost effective. It does, however, produce a regular newsletter which is circulated to over five hundred organisations and individuals including existing and prospective customers.

DPCE seeks the custom of major companies and public sector institutions which have large computer installations. The directors consider that the potential market for its services is very substantial and that only a small percentage of computer maintenance is currently contracted to independent companies. They believe that this market share will increase as the benefits of independent computer maintenance become more widely recognised and successful performance and market exposure further enhance the credibility of companies such as DPCE. There are certain trends in the computer industry which will affect DPCE and the service which it offers, but the directors do not consider they will be prejudicial to DPCE's growth.

- (a) a slow but definite trend towards tempte diagnosocs, wheteby faults can be traced away from the machine and the faults tectified by semi-skilled staff: progress in this field to date has been limited, but in any event DPCE sees the separation of customers from a manufacturer's skilled engineering service as working ultimately in its favour;
- the improved reliability and reduced cost of equipment with a concornitant reduction of manufacturer's maintenance charges, particularly in respect of central processing units: this does not, however, result in a net reduction of DPCE's market as it is more than offset by the increased use, and greatet sophistication, of the peripheral equipment attached to central processing units; and
- a trend towards distributed processing, in response to which DPCE has organised itself to provide maintenance on temotely located networks as well as central sites.

Experience with customers leads DPCE to believe that organisations with large and complex systems frequently perceive advantages in using independent maintenance, notably:

- competitive pricing resulting in cost saving;
- arrangements tailored specifically to the needs of customers, including if required, 24 bours per day presence of engineers specifically dedicated to the customer's site, thus increasing available system time;
- protection against withdrawal of maintenance by the manufacturer or equipment
- total systems maintenance of mixed equipment, eliminating contention between manufacturers over the allocation of responsibility for faults;
- control over capital expenditure because DPCE has no vested interest in up-grading the equipment or declaring it obsolete:
- greater freedom to purchase plug-compatible, add-on and second-user equipment, in order to make the best use of financial resources;

Competition

DPCE's principal competitors are the equipment suppliers who traditionally offer a maintenance service for their own equipment. As well as providing a source of revenue, this service has enabled the manufacturers to maintain close contact with their customers and thereby assist in securing further sales. Some manufacturers have at times made it difficult for DPCE to gain access in documentation, diagnostic facilities and spare parts, and DPCE continues to encot some resistance. Nevertheless, owing to the existence of anti-trust laws in the USA, DPCE has been able to obtain documentation, diagnostic facilities and spare parts from the USA even when encountering resistance in the UK. Furthermore, the directors consider that DPCE now has good working relationships with nearly all the major manufacturers.

There are several computer maintenance companies in the UK which might provide competition for DPCE in the future. They have not, however, proved a significant force to date. Most of these companies concentrate on minicomputers, microcomputers and smaller DPCE has a lease for a period of twenty-five years from 25th March, 1978 of premises at 6 Broad Street, Wokingham, Berkshire. The rent is currently £36,000 per annum. DPCE will have insufficient space in this building by the end of 1983 and is currently negotiating for the acquisition of larger premises in Wokingham, comprising approximately 9,000 square feet at an annual rent likely to be slightly more than twice the rent for the existing premises (which will be disposed of in due course).

DPCE's only other permanent accommodation is an office in The Netherlands shared with NVO Computer Leasing B.V. ("NVO") to which DPCE (Nederland) BV ("DPCE (NL)") pays a nominal rent. In addition DPCE has a number of repair workshops on customers' properties in the UK and The Nederlands. premises in the UK and The Netherlands.

DIRECTORS, MANAGEMENT AND EMPLOYEES

C. G. Clive, aged 46, was appointed the chairman of the Company on its formation in 1981. He has a degree in electrical engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and an MBA from Harvard Business School, and has been connected with the computer industry for MIDA from Flarvard Business School, and has been connected with the computer industry for 25 years. His career has included periods at IBM and as a vice-president of Bankers Trust Co. During his time with the latter he helped to build up its London merchant banking subsidiary, Bankers Trust International, and he has participated in starting up or developing a oumber of companies in high technology and computer related fields. He is currently joint managing director of Thompson Clive & Partners where he manages two venture capital funds concentrating on high technology investment in the UK and the USA. He is the chairman, or a director, of a number of small to medium sized companies, mainly in the high technology field.

K. G. Meadows, aged 47, was appointed managing director in 1981. After graduating from Oxford University, Mr. Meadows spent four years on the marketing side of British-American Tobacco in Eastern Europe and South America. In 1963 he first entered the computer field by joining Burroughs Machines. He left to join English Electric Computers, now ICL, in 1967, where he occupied various management posts, including that of London area manager for Baric Computing Services. In 1972 he was recruited by First National City Bank of New York, now Citibank, in order to plan and manage a European computer services network. When this project was aborted in 1974 he joined IMS Lycrete as international marketing manager. Following a brief period with Marcol Computer Services, he joined the UK divisioo of DPCE Pty, as general manager in 1979. Pty. as general manager in 1979.

C. R. E. Brooke, aged 52, was appointed a director in 1981. He is currently chief executive of Candover Investments, and has held posts as deputy managing director of the Industrial Reorganisation Corporation from 1966 to 1969, an executive director of S. Pearson & Son from 1971 to 1979, and group managing director of EMI for a short period until it was merged with Thorn Electrical Industries in 1980.

J. D. Cassidy, aged 46, was appointed a director in 1982. After graduating from London University he spent ten years with the Decca Navigator Company originally as a development university he spent ten years with the Decca Navigator Company originally as a development engineer, then as chief engineer and finally as general manager of various overseas subsidiaries in Nigeria, the Middle East and the USA. He left Decca in 1970 to concentrate on the computer industry and joined GTE International becoming their sales manager in 1971 and undertaking managerial training in the UK and the USA. In 1973 he joined IBM and was responsible for selling large systems into the distribution industry. Subsequent training in point of sale management systems followed as a precursor to participation in IBM's team for the retail store industry. He spent two years as marketing director of BIS Applied Systems, a major systems have before injuring DPCE as sales manager in 1979. He became sales and marketing director. efore joining DPCE as sales manager in 1979. He became sales and marketing director

L. G. Stopford Sackville, aged 50, was appointed a director in June, 1983. He qualified as a chartered accountant in 1959, since when he has had extensive experience working for a wide range of companies, principally in the financial and mineral resources sectors. He has been a director of a number of major companies including Charter Consolidated, Selection Trust, Mineral and Resources Corporation and Anglo American Corporation of South Africa. He was chairman of Cape Industries from 1979 to 1980, having been a director since 1970, and of Beralt Tin & Wolfram from 1972 to 1980. He is currently a non-executive director of Anglo American Gold Investment Company and Chairman of Bardsey and Union Jack Oil Company. E. H. Tordoff, aged 36, was appointed finance director in January, 1983. After qualifying as a chartered accountant in 1968 he spent two years as a partner in a provincial practice before joining Peat Marwick Mitchell in Jamaica. On his return to England he lectured in audit and accountancy for two years at Hull College of Commerce and then became group accountant with the Bishop's Move group. He joined DPCE in 1977 as financial controller and became finance director of DPCE (UK) in 1982. He is also company secretary.

D. A. Travers, aged 39, was appointed a director in 1982. After serving an apprenticeship with Thorn Electrical Industries he joined 5 perry Univac as a computer engineer in 1965. He was with Sperry Univac continuously from 1965 until he joined DPCE, apart from a period of 18 months when he was engaged by Burroughs Machines on its Burclays Bank project, and by Compoter Field Maintenance as a project engineer. During his time with Sperry he held various engineering and management positions and, as site manager, was directly responsible for the installation and maintenance of the Trans Australian and BA West London Air Terminal computer systems. He joined DPCE in 1976 as a site manager and was appointed engineering manager in 1978. In 1981 he became operations director of DPCE(UK).

Senior Management

The operating subsidiaries of the Company also have the following directors:

J. M. Grieg-Gran, aged 35, was appointed engineering director of DPCE (UK) in January, 1983, having previously been engineering manager with specific responsibility for servicing ICL systems and new projects including the National Girobank contract. Prior to joining DPCE in 1976 he worked with IBM for two years and was on the technical support staff of Sperry Univac from 1969 until 1975.

R. J. Marshall, aged 40, was appointed the purchasing director of DPCE (UK) in 1982. He spent 7 years in the Royal Air Force, and worked for Honeywell as a technical support engineer and for Sperry Univac as a customer engineer. He joined DPCE Pty. in Australia in 1972 as an engineer, and held a oumber of managerial positions up to 1978, when he transferred to the UK division.

N. J. van Onselen, aged 38, became part-time sales director of DPCE (NL) in April, 1983. After studying at the Technical University of Delft, he joined the National Aerospace laboratory as a programmer, later moving to IBM. In 1971 he joined Data 100 Systems, bolding a oumber of marketing positions, before moving in 1978 to ITEL, a company involved in selling and broking computers. In 1981 he formed NVO, and since 1981 he has acted as consultant to DPCE (NL).

DPCE operates through a management structure of area and site managers, all but one of whom were previously engineers with DPCE. It is DPCE's policy to encourage promotion from within and to create customer awareness throughout the organisation.

DPCE has approximately 160 employees of whom about 25 are based at Wokingham in Berkshire, 2 at Zeist in The Netherlands and the remainder at customers' premises. An analysis of the employees by function shows:

Operations and engineering Marketing Support services Finance

100 About 80 per cent. of the employees are aged 40 or under and some 30 per cent. are aged 30 or under. Most of the labour used is skilled, and this is reflected in the average total remnneracion which is approaching £15,000 per annum. DPCE offers excellent career opportunities for its engineers and has experienced a low rate of staff turnover.

Pension and health insurance scheines

DPCE provides a non-contributory pension scheme for all permanent UK employees and executive directors over the age of 21 with more than six mooths service. The pension scheme executive directors over the age of 21 with more than six mooths service. The pension scheme provides its members with free life assurance equal to four times basic earnings. Based on a valuation carried out by the Scottish Life Assurance Company, the funds of the scheme as at 1st October, 1982 were sufficient to meet the accrued liabilities. DPCE also bears the cost of a permanent health insurance scheme which provides benefits in the event of prolonged periods of sickness, and of insuring its employees with B.U.P.A.

Profit sharing scheme

DPCE is in the course of establishing a profit sharing scheme to be approved by the inland Revenue under the Finance Act 1978 (as amended), a summary of which is set out in paragraph 8 of Appendix 4: It is estimated that the cost of the profit sharing scheme will out exceed the cost of the current profit sharing arrangements, which it replaces.

Shareholdings

Following The Offer for Sale, the directors of the Company and nine senior employees of DPCE will hold a total of 1,712,500 ordinary shares of 5p each, representing 14.5 per cent. of

PROCEEDS OF THE OFFER FOR SALE AND WORKING CAPITAL

Proceeds of the Offer for Sale The proceeds of the Offer for Sale will be applied:

(a) in paying to the Company to respect of 1,962,000 new ordinary shares of 5p each to be subscribed by Lazard Brothers & Co., Limited ("Lazards") the sum of £3,217,015, being the minimum tender price of 170p per share less a commission of 4.25p per share (exclusive of VAT) and a fee to Lazards;
(b) in paying to the shareholders of the Company as at 1st July, 1983 a sum in respect of each of those, shares equal to the amount (if any) by which the striking price exceeds the minimum sender price; and in paying to such shareholders in respect of a total of 1,907,000 ordinary shares of 5p each sold by them to Lazards a sum equal to the striking price less a commission of 4.25p per share (exclusive of VAT). These arrangements are set out in greater detail under "Offer for Sale agreement" in paragraph

2 of Appendix 4:: DPCE Holdings plc

Out of the proceeds receivable by the Company, estimated to amount to £2.886 million net of expenses, £787,500 will be used to repay the principal of the 16 per cent. Undecured Loan Scock 1983/88 of the Company on or before 31st July, 1983 at £105 per cent. £847,500 to redeem its outstanding 11 per cent. cumulative redeemable preference shares of £1 each on or before 31st August, 1983 at £13p per share, and the balance to finance the expansion of DPCE's business, in particular the cost of establishing new contracts, and to provide working capital.

The directors are of the opinion that, taking account of available bank facilities and the net proceeds of the Offer for Sale receivable by the Company, DPCE will have sufficient working capital for its present requirements.

DIVIDENDS

In lieu of a final dividend, an interim dividend totalling £12,262 (equivalent to approximately 0.1p per ordinary share of 5p following the reorganisation of the Company's share capital) was

The shares now being offered for sale will rank in full for all dividends hereafter declared, paid or made on the ordinary share capital of the Company. The directors intend, in the absence of unforeseen circumstances, to recommend dividends for the year ending 30th June, 1984 totalling our less than 20 per ordinary share. It is intended that an interior dividend of 0.7p will be paid in February, 1984 and the final dividend will be paid in October, 1984.

DPCE's business has been consistently profitable throughout the period. On the basis of the profit estimate, turnover and profits before loan stock interest have grown by 45 per cent. and 44 per cent. compound respectively over the five years ended 30th June, 1983 and by 51 per cent. and 56 per cent. compound respectively over the three years ended 30th June, 1983.

The directors estimate that in the year ended 30th June, 1983 turnover attributable to the operations in The Netherlands accounted for approximately 9 per cent. of DPCE's total

DPCE's success in developing new business and increasing its income over the last few years has been matched by its success in recruiting, training and managing staff to enable consistent levels of profitability and overall margins to be maintained.

The effective rate of taxation has been between 37 and 46 per cent, for the five years ended 30th June, 1982 and, for the year ended 30th June, 1983, it is expected to be not more than 34 per cent.

These low rates are attributable to accelerated capital allowances and other reliefs.

The earnings per ordinary share for the years ended 30th June: 1981, 1982 and 1983 were reduced by the significant preference dividends which arose as part of the financing of the purchase by the Company of DPCE (UK).

The directors estimate that the profit before loan stock interest for the year ended 30th June, 1983 was £1.3 million. Coopers & Lybrand and Thornton Baker, and Lazards, have reported oo the profit estimate and their letters are reproduced in Appendix 3.

The pro forms earnings per ordinary share following the Offer for Sale have been calculated on the estimated pro forma profit after taxation for the year ended 30th June, 1983, the oumber of shares which will then be in issue, and the net proceeds of the Offer for Sale available to the Company after repayment of the 16 per cent. Unsecured Loan Stock 1983/88 and redemption of the 11 per cent. cumulative redeemable preference shares of £1 each of the Company. It has been assumed that the balance net of expenses, would have earned a return of 10 per cent. before

On the basis of the pro forma profit estimate, a tax charge of 37 per cent, and 11,781,000 ordinary shares in issue following the Offer for Sale, earnings per ordinary share are 7.69. If a notional charge for corporation tax were provided at the rate of 52 per cent. on the pro forma estimated profit, the earnings per ordinary share would be S.8p.

At the minimum tender price of 170p per ordinary share and on the basis of pro forms earnings per ordinary share of 7.6p the price/earnings multiple is 22.4: based on a octional fully taxed figure of 5.8p per ordinary share it would be 29.3.

Based on the profit enimate for the year ended 30th June, 1983, DPCE's profits before loan stack interest have increased by six times over the past five years, and by nearly four times over the three years since 1st July, 1980. DPCE's future is closely linked to the development of the computer industry as a whole and, as relative expenditure on services increases, the strongly customer-orientated nature of DPCE's services can be expected to become more highly valued. The directors therefore expect the business of DPCE and its revenue and profit to continue to grow in real terms. The directors expect that the profit after tax for the six months ending 31st December, 1983 will represent a material improvement over the results for the equivalent period in the preceding year.

lo the view of the directors, DPCE's present market has considerable potential for development, and new markets are available, primarily in the UK, Europe and the USA. Future growth will come from a wider acceptance of the independent manutenance concept among potential customers and an expansion of DPCE's capabilities in terms of manpower and expertise. While DPCE currently has no difficulty in recruiting engineering staff of the calibre required, the directors recognise the need to develop the management expertise of DPCE's engineers to handle the increasing business, and they are confident that this can be achieved.

The directors believe that with its competence and experience DPCE is capable of leading the development of independent maintenance in the rapidly expanding markets for computer

APPENDIX 1

PRO FORMA CONSOLIDATED BALANCE SHEET AT 31ST MARCH, 1983. Set our below is a pro forma balance sheet based on DPCE's consolidated balance sheet at 31st March, 1983 as set out in the Accountants' Report in Appendix 2 adjusted to reflect:

- the sub-division and conversion of "A" and "B" ordinary shares into ordinary shares of 5p each and the capitalisation of reserves and rights issue of new ordinary shares of 5p each referred to in note 17 to Appendix 2;
- the receipt of the minimum tender price in respect of the issues of shares referred to in note 17 to Appendix 2, amounting to £2.902 million, net of the estimated expenses
- (iii) the redemption of the loan stock at £105 per cent; and
- (iv) the redemption of the preference shares at 113p per £1 share.

Goodwill The goodwill in the consolidated balance sheet arises on the acquisition by DPCE (UK) of DPCE Pty. Subsequently DPCE Pty.'s assets, lightlines and business were transferred to DPCE (UK), which continues the trade. Although the goodwill arises on consolidation, it is supported by goodwill in DPCE (UK). In accordance with DPCE's accounting policy, goodwill is stated at original consideration less the fair value of assets acquired, less amounts written off. The directors are aware that is tilkely that an accounting standard will be issued which will require that goodwill arising on consolidation is written off either: through the profit and loss account over its economic life, up to a maximum of twenty years; or in its entirety against reserves. The effect of complying with this proposed standard and adopting approach (a) above, assuming an economic life of twenty years, would be to decrease profit before and after taxation by £75,000 per annum. 12. Notes to the consolidated current cost accounts 1. Basis of preparation

The current cost accounts, which are in summarised form, have been prepared by reference to current cost principles in conformity with Statement of Standard Accounting Practice No. 16. The accounting policies are the same as those used to the historical cost accounts except as set out below:—

Fixed assets and depreciation The gross current cost of plant and equipment and office equipment has been hased on appropriate indices compiled by the government statistical service. The gross current cost of contrast equipment has not been adjusted at this equipment is not increating in cost.

Contract establishment costs (p)

The gross current cost of contract establishment costs has been based on internally produced estimates incorporating DPCE's pay increases over the relevant periods.

Monetary working capital

Since net correct liabilities exist no adjustment has been made for monetary working capital. The amount of net current liabilities has been included with net borrowings in calculating the generic

- (d) The grating adjustment represents that portion of the current cost adjustments which is attributable to the net horrowings and therefore is not taken into account when calculating the current cost profit attributable to the ordinary shareholders. The grating adjustment has been calculated using the opening and closing correst cost balance sheets.

1st Inly, 1983

1st July, 1983

We have reviewed the accounting policies and calculations adopted in arriving at the profit estimate of DPCE Holdings plc and its subsidiaries for the year ended 30th June. 1983 as set out in the paragraph headed "Profit Estimate" of the prospectus to be dated 4th July, 1983. The profit estimate, for which you, as directors, are solely responsible, has been prepared under the historical cost convention, and is based on audited accounts for the nine months ended 31st March, 1983, management accounts for April and May, 1983 and an estimate of results for June,

In our opinion, the profit estimate, so far as the accounting policies and calculations are concerned, has been properly compiled and its presented nn a basic consistent with the accounting policies normally adopted by DPCE Holdings plc and its subsidiaries.

Yours zruly, Yours truly, THORNTON BAKER COOPERS & LYBRAND Chartered Accountants The Directors 21 Moorfickly DPCE Holdings plc, 6 Broad Street

THE ARTS

John Russell Taylor, writing on this page yesterday, found an 'extraordinary charge' in the work of Malcolm Morley, who is currently exhibiting at the Whitechapel Gallery.
Interview by Roger Berthoud

A marriage of heart and head

Not many professional artists have started their careers in prison. The exhibition at the Whitechapel Gallery of the work of Malcolm Morley, a 51-year-old British painter living in New York since 1958, is in a way a mooument to those who believe that society gains if prisoners are treated humanely, and to those prepared to help them. In Morley's case it was o local painter who took an art class while he was serving a three-year sentence at Wormwood Scrubs. "If anyone out there is still doing such things, carry on!" Moriey says. There was little that was normal in Morley's early life. Born in Highgate, he never knew who his father was -There was some talk that he may have been an Italian, or an orphan adopted by an Italian family." When was six, his mother married a sour Welshman called Evans (Morley was his mother's name). Young Malcolm was fascinated by the sea, and used to make balsa-wood models of famous liners. After attending o minor boarding school or two, he went to a naval cadets' school in Surrey. Later he served as a galley-boy on some notably stormy trips on an ocean-going tug before ending up, for reasons still too painful to disclose, first in a borstal near Birmingham and then in the Scrubs.

"The art teacher's encouragement really gave me this feeling of worth-whileness", Morley recalls. "Then I read Lust for Life [about van Gogh] and that really got me going." While oo parole - he had been a model a waiter in a restaurant, he served prisoner - he worked his way down to Cornwall, having read about the St Ives artist colony, selling topographi-cal watercolours en route to earn his keep. His probation officer spotted his talent. He got a night job at a Lyons Corner House; and by day, for o year, he attended Camberwell School of Art. One of his first buyers was Sir John Mills, who admired a painting he was doing in Richmond of a house Romney had lived in. Then Sir Richard Attenborough wanted one. Morley could "go out on the street and make out.".

When he heard about Picasso on his second day at Camberwell, he felt that artist's surge of power and understood his significance. Every prison, he explained, is run by a charismatic daddyo, to whom even the warders defer. "I recognized Picasso as the daddyo of painting, who in turn had o daddyo, Cezanne."
On then to the Royal College of Art, where he felt rather out of it, suspecting he was being used as an angry young man. But he loved the girls there, and overlapped with painters like Peter Blake, Jo Tilson, Dick Smith and Robyn Denny.

He went to New York in 1958 partly because he felt the excitement of the Tate Gallery's 1956 exhibition of contemporary American painting; partly because he had fallen for an American girl, to whom he was later briefly married; and partly perhaps to make o fresh start. While working as and met - the painter-Barnett Newman, who stood up and embraced him as a colleague, and later gave him much encouragement. The meticulous studies of luxury liners which open the Whitechapel show came after Morley had worked his way through an abstract period.

Listening to Morley is a fairly overwhelming experience. He talks with great articulateness and charm, and at high speed. Perhaps at first he is feeling defensive, since he packs references to Sartre's La Nauste. James Joyce, Schoenberg and Delac-roix into the first few minutes, as well as an amusing description of why he claims to have been educated by weight: in the Scrubs, he says, they were allowed only two books a week, and he used to sell food to the librarians to ensure they gave him good, heavy, long-lasting tomes like the works of Theodore Dreiser. One imagines his psychiatrist - he has spent 12 years in analysis - must have had o stremuous if informative can writers like Alvin Toffier and Norman O. Brown, whose analysis of the conflict between the sophisticated and the primitive in man, the split between body and head, libido and ego, touches on one of the central themes of his paintings. When we grow up, Morley explains, we have to give up the instant gratification of our desires or libido. But there is a constant danger of going too far in giving either the libido or the ego its ead, so to speak - especially for the artist, who is expected to break through frootiers. That's really what the work is all about - trying to integrate the whole self into one thing ... each picture is another me." He hopes that those who see his

We can all extend our capacities almost endlessly, he believes. "You can imagine that a piano is only a bit cart out of a keyboard going to infinity at either end. The idea is to keep enlarging the range of the keyboard." His own life seems to exemplify that belief.

The reactions of those who see his works reflect what they are at that moment, he believes, just as for him they are an attempt to establish his own identity, uniting heart and head. He is both painter and stroke-by-stroke spectator, and each painting is a cycle of losing, gaining and evolving. He once stashed a painting he had sold for a much-occded 40,000 dollars and handed back the cheque. "It was a form of renunci-

Refreshingly, Morley fieds New York "more provincial than it can ever imagine". Yet, like some Flying Englishman, he feels condemned to serve out his term there - and also doubts the capacity of the English to respond to his work. In mastering those disguises and subterfuges which delay gratification and make people "civilized", he seems to fear we have gone too far in separating the head and body which, in his own work, he tries to unite.

Her pioneering gained her little credit but her daughter Doris, oow 83, a retired history teacher from Burnley, sought to remedy this in a hiography which formed the basis for Alan Plater's play, celebrating that van, from Granada last night.

Daughter Doris, who travelled with her mother and did not attend school - mother sent her to a private one - uotil she was seven, acted as a guide in the play. Father, who married Ada when he was the van-driv-er, stayed at home later. Being married to such an independent lady must have had its trials.

Anyway Ada, working for the Women's Trade Unioo League, did a sterling joh that had to be done. One suspects she might have succeeded in any sphere had that sweatshop oot impelled her to launch herself against the capitalist ramparts.

Moira Armstrong directed this glimpse of socialist and feminist history and Howard Baker produced. The part of Ada as an adult was resolutely played by Diane Fletcher but the dramatization left me with more curiosity about the intri-cacies of Chew family life thao

So why not select a familiar environment that has the same effect of cutting a small group of suspects off from the outside world: a Tube interior, for example?

The answer to that, of course, is that strangers in the tube do not converse. And Mr Sloan's play never recovers from the opening solecism of unleashing a flood of noisy theatrical talk in an ultra-realist setting that forbids anything beyond a mutmur of spology when somebody stands on your foot.

Being a contract by the suppowher, being a contract for services it was the very prototype of a contract of which before the fusion of law and equity a court would never grant specific

An unbroken line of authority in the House of Lords had held that, if the withdrawal clause so provided, the shipowner was entitled to withdraw the services of the vessel from the charterer if the latter failed to pay an instalment of hire in precise compliance with the pro-visions of the charter.

To gram an injunction restraining the shipowace from exercising his right of withdrawal of the vessel from the charterer's service, though negative in form, was pregnant with, an affirmative order to the shipowner to perform the contract; juristically it was indistinguishable [1983] 2 WLR 248) who dismissed the charterers' appeal from Mr Justice Lloyd assumed that the jurisdiction point, could be decided in the charterers' favour but on the particular facts from the particular facts of equity, indeed, in appropriate cases relieve against the charterers on the present of a sum of in the specific perform the countact; from his specific perform the countact from his specific perform said, at p 870: "It must be obvious and in respect of that category of contracts, even in the even of countacts, and in respect of that category of countacts, even in the even of countacts, and in respect of that category of countacts, even in the even of countacts, and in respect of that category of countacts, and in respect of that category of countacts, even in the even of countacts, and in respect of that category of countacts, even in the even of countacts, even in the even of countacts, and in respect of that category of countacts, the same of a countact to the shippown and in the countact.

That was, in his Lordship's view, sufficient reason in itself to compel rejection of the suggestion that the equitable principle of reflect from forfeiture was juristically capable of extension so as to grant to the court a discretion to prevent a shipowner from exercising his strict commontal rights under a windowner clause in a signer and a supplemental program of the court of the rights under a withdrawal clause in a time charter that was not a charter by demise.

In The Afovos ([1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep 469), Mr Justice Lloyd had sought to extract from Lord Wilberforce's speech in Shiloh Spinners Ltd v Harding ([1973] AC 691) a more general proposition that wherever a party to a contract was by its terms given a right to terminate it for a breach consisting only of non-payment of a sum of money and the purpose of a incorporating the right of termination in the contract was to secure the payment of that sum, there was the payment of that sum, there was an equitable jurisdiction to grant relief against the exercise of the right of termination.

That Lord Wilberforce's mainly historical statement, at p 722, had never been meant to apply generally to contracts not involving any transfer of proprietary or possessory rights but providing for a right to determine the contract in default of panetral payment of a sum of money payable under it was clear from his speech in The Laconia.

Speaking of a time character, he had said, at p 870: "It must be obvious that this is a very different type of the part of the relief against the operation of a withdrawal clause in a time charter, there were practical reasons of legal policy for declining to create any such new jurisdiction out of sympathy for charterers.

The freight market was notoriously volatile. If it rose supidly thring the period of a time charter, the charterer was the beneficiary of the windfall, which he could realize if he whiteld to by subchartering at the then market rates. What withdrawal of the vessel did was to transfer the benefit of the windfall transfer the benefit of the windfall from charterer to shipowner.

His Lordship would dismiss the appeal, He did so with the reminder that his reasoning had been directed exclusively to time charters that were not by demise. Identical considerations would not be applicable to bareboat charters and it would in his Lordship's view be unwise for their Lordships to express any views about them. Lord Keith, Lord Scarman, Lord Roskill and Lord Bridge agreed. Solicitors: Elborne Mitchell & Co;

Ohikoya and Others v Silver-Where, on an ex parte appli-cation, leave had been granted to issue a writ against a defendant out of the jurisdiction and a Mareva injunction, to preserve assets within the jurisdiction, had been issued against that defendant, the defendant was not to be taken to have submitted to the jurisdiction with regard to the main action merely because he had later applied to discharge the Mareva injunction.

Moreover the mere fact that a Mareva injunction was sought did not of itself confer jurisdiction on the court to grant leave to serve the writt not of the jurisdiction under Order 11, rule 1 (1) of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

the Supreme Court. Mr Justice Parker so held in the Commercial Court of the Queen's Bench Division on June 29, granting an application by the second defendant, a Norwegian bank, to set saids the service on them, out of the jurisdiction, of a writ issued by the plaintiffs. HIS LORDSHIP said that a defendant on whom a writ had been served out of the jurisdiction had, by virtue of Order 12, rule 8, 28 days in which to contest the court's jurisdiction by applying to set aside service of the writ.

Frequently when leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction was granted, a Mareva injunction was also issued, and if a subsequent challenge to such an injunction involved submission to the court's jurisdiction with regard to the substantive action, a defendant would be deprived of the right conferred on him under Order 12, rule 8 if he wished to free his assets before the 28 draw had excited. before the 28 days had expered. Order 11, rule 1 (i) gave the court. jurisdiction to grant leave to serve a wit out of the jurisdiction if an injunction was sought in the action.

"Injunction" there meant one which could be granted by way of substantial relief at the trial, and a simple Mareva injunction was not sufficient.

ICC arbitration precludes costs security

Bank Mellet v Helleniki Techniki SA

The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Kerr, Lord Justice Waller and Lord Justice Robert Goff) held on June 28 that, where a contract provided that any arbitration should take place in London but the substantive law was Iranian, where the original contracting parties and the subject matter had no connexion with this country and the arbitration was to be conducted under the rules of the International Chamber of Commence, it was inappropriate for the English court to order the claimant to give security for costs under section 12 (6) of the Arbitration Act 1950 Arbitration Act 1950.

LORD JUSTICE KERR said that all the powers of the court under section 12 (6) were wholly discretionary and their grant or refusal would take account of the relevant contractual provisions and of the requirements of justice in the circumstances of each case. In an international arbitration. particular regard would be given to the connexion the parties or the arbitration had with this country. If foreign parties had agreed to arbitrate in this country under some foreign or international set of rules, such as those of the ICC, the case for the exercise of a purely English the exercise of a purely English discretionary jurisdiction must inevitably be weakened.

The application for security in the present case was sufficiently inconsistent with the scheme and spirit of the ICC rules to make it inappropriate in principle for the court to exercise its discretion in favour of the order sought.

shareholders who speak for a quarter of the votes in the Rank Organization are in a corner. Their names are among the powerful and wealthy investment institutions in the City. Yet they are beginning to look, at least to the casual observer, rather impotent.

All want a big shake-np of Rank's 19-member board on which sit seven knights and where fewer than half take any day-to-day re-sponsibility in running the company. But none of the nine is sure how to effect that wish. Three months ago they knew. At least, they thought there was agreement with the board that a new executive deputy-chairman should be appointed who would eventually take over complete control. They and other shareholders thought that therewould be a real change to improve the poor return which Rank was getting from substantial assets. Nothing has happened so far.

On Monday, Rank is expected tocome out with first-half profits at least two-thirds of the figure reported for the wbole of 1982. It sbould also maintain the dividend.

So Rank is far from on its back. And that makes it harder for institutions to effect change.

There is also the more practical point of where to find the right person to run Rank efficiently and in doing so, to carry the incumbent board with him. Normally, companies are in a much worse state before board changes are demanded and managements become much more attentive to shareholders' demands. That is wby the insti-

Mr Harry Goodman, Inta-sun's ebullient chairman, was justifiably smiling yesterday. Despite last year's problems in the package holiday trade, including heavy discounting to maintain volumes, Intasun's results were up to expectations. More particularly, prospects for this summer look better.

Intasun, with its new acqui sitions, was 24 per cent up on last year. Excluding the new acquisitions leaves the mainstream businesses with an 8 per cent rise. Possibly half that increase, however, is from growth in the company's new

"We are well positioned to continue our development"

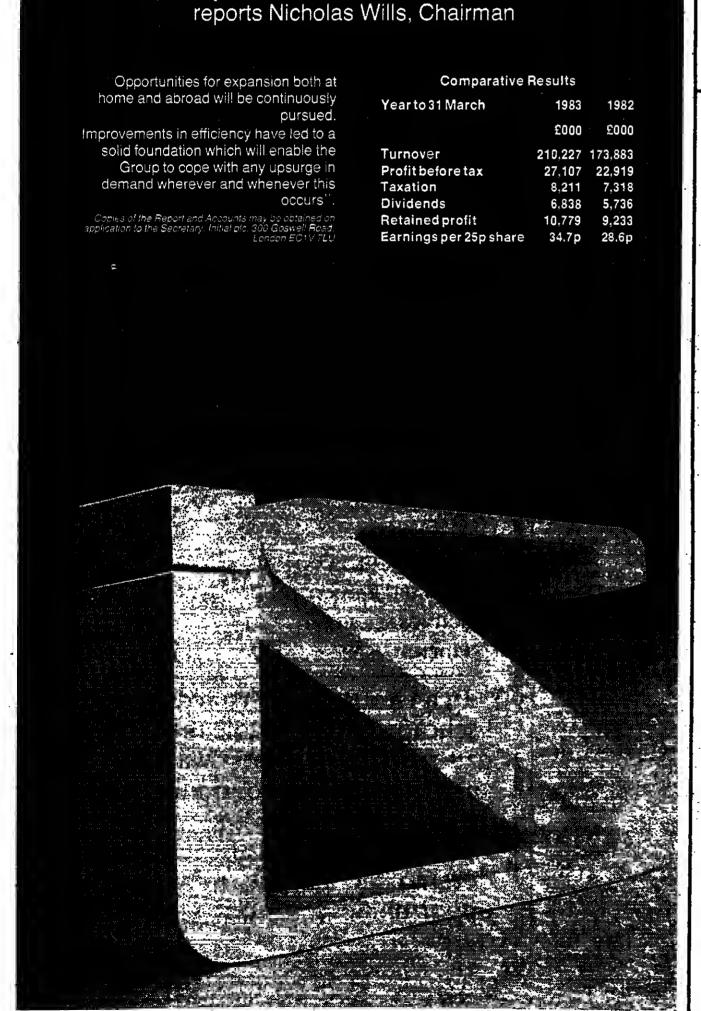

JAMES GULLIVER, CHAIRMAN, COMMENTS:

"I am encouraged by our current trading performance in difficult market conditions both in the U.K. and in the U.S. As a result of the three acquisitions, namely George Morton, North West Vinners and Barton Brands, which we have made in the past two years, I believe we are well positioned to continue our development. In this respect discussions have been initiated between the Board of your company and the Board of Argyll Foods PLC, of which Tam also Chairman, with a view to the merger of the two companies."

Gulliver and his expansive travels

Mr Jimmy Gulliver is at it again. It was no surprise in the city yesterday that Amalgamated Distilled Priducts should accompany its revelation of £4m annual profits with the news that it is holding merger talks with Argyll Foods.

Mr Gulliver controls 12 per cent of ADP and 7 per cent of Argyll through his own James Gulliver Associates: in recent years, the passage of only a few months without an important Gulliver deal has been likely to cause an air of expectation, not 10 say speculation, on the stock

The ambitious Scot has made oo secret of his aim to make Argyll a truly giant food group, to match the big high street retailing names and the likes of Unilever or Grand Metropolitan. He has spouted from the rooftops that the only way to do this in the 1980s is to buy np other companies rather than grow organically like Tesco nr Sainsbury.

"I have stated on a number of occasions," he said in last year's Argyll annual report, "that the very substantial investment and development programmes of the major grocery multiple retailers over recent years have made it increasingly impracticable for another major national grocery retail busioess to be developed, in order to compete effectively, other than by acquisitinn or merger."

The same clearly applies in Mr. Gulliver's mind to food. The result, if the ADP merger. goes through, would be a group ranging from cash and carry wholesaling to whisky, from freezer centres to oatcakes, with sales around £1.3bn, profits around £30m and a stock market value approaching

Most of this has been built up over four years and few suppose that ADP will mark the end of expansion for Mr Gulliver. . . .

So far, the City has been content, with the odd hiccup, to put up the money that Mr Gulliver needs for his expansion via new share capital and Gulliver. loans. A special relationship

"I decided it was time I was running my own show", he said later, "and I also wanted some capital for myself. It was the start of one of the City's happier relationships with would-be venturers.

In the early 1970s Gulliver and Oriel were overshadowed in every sense by Sir James Goldsmith, then busily constructing his giant Cavenham Foods. Apart from the sheer size of Cavenham's operation, Sir James himself was large, ebullient and aggressive, while Gulliver is compact, quietly spoken, reserved and analytical. But he delivered the goods.

At that time Argyli was valued at £44m on the Stock Exchange. Allied, which had been through several phases since it was formed from Liptons, Home & Colonial and Maypole, had a turnover of some £800m. It featured anything from Presto supermarkets to quite small outlets and was not regarded as the pearl of the grocery trade at a time when Sainsbury. Tesco et al were fighting it out at a high level of growth, expansion and coosumer service.

The takeover marked the biggest hiccup in Mr Gulliver's relationship with the City, as a huge share issue made on an nausual tender basis flopped in unsettled days for the stock market. But the mutual admiration between Mr Gulliver and the City survived with better than expected early results from the merger.

And Mr Gulliver had won what he wanted. "We are now in the league of major food retailers in Britain", he reported. In his Statement on the 1983 Accounts, Sir Jack Wellings, CBE, said:

The worldwide recession seriously affected turnover and profits but the surplus arising from property sales enabled a profit before tax to be made. Our companies are bealthy, competitive in price and product design and will readily respond to any improvement in the economy.

During the year the Flexible Manufacturing System. SCAMP, set up under a Government development contract, was opened. This development led to a joint venture company with Fanue for the sale and manufacture of robots, the formation of Scamp Systems Ltd. to sell FMS technology and the introduction of CNC machine tools to meet both low cost and high technology requirements.

We have every reason to hope that we will be able to continue to increase our overseas market penetration and, if the home market does improve, will be able to return to an acceptable level of profits.

oppressive.

By the time leading counsel and the attorney general had persuaded the Island Revenue not to prosecute the principals in the Rossimster allair, both the idea of criminal charges and indeed Rossministe itself had become irrelevances. And what a relief that is for anyone who cares about a decent society free from Italianate cant, in which laws apply to Criminal proceedings were an irrelevance because the Inland Revenue achieved its objectives more suisfactorily through the courts; Rossminster is an irrelevance because those court desisions put an end, for the time being at least, to the genesis of its ultimately anti-social business.

People have always sought to minimize tax. But in the permissive world of the 1960s and 1970s with tax rates sometimes at absurdly high nominal levels, it became a half accepted feature of individualism to use any means to thwart the will of Parliament and dodge your does.

The poor used the illegal

Householders were proud of saving money by cash-only payments. The rich and the big corporations could afford tax experts to do the job within the letter of the law.

Mr Roy Tocker was one of the most brilliant tax experts of them all. The Rossminster group, which he created with fellow accountant Mr Ronald Plummer, converted artificial tax avoidance schemes from a cottage industry to the production line, complete with sophisticated marketing, standard packages and even a sort of warranty.

A typical Rossminster fili-in-the-blanks package might involve 25 transactions, carried out in precise order over a seven-day period. They used bundreds of cardborad companies, making nonsense of the legitimate use of com-panies to limit hability.

They used the opinions of leading tax counsel as sales literature, leading some to ponder the bar's pro-fessional morality. And one scheme at least made use of charitable status, passing £50m through a small charity, of which little was left genuine charitable purposes. The would be clients queued up, from pop-stars to politicious.

Others were in the game, but Rossminster became the unacceptable face of avoidance for the Inland Revenue which feared it had lost hundreds of millions in taxes. They pur-sued their criminal investigation through the famous dawn raids mainly because nowhere in civil courts, which tended to take an exquisitely sobtle, but almost exclusively literal, reading of the law.

They did challenge the schemes through the civil courts, as much to make life difficult for Rossminster and its clients as for any hope of success. The civil court was success. The civil count was the right place, for Messrs Tucker, Plummer and co intended to act within the law. Criminality would have been an oversight.

In the event, the Law Lords reversed their usual stance in the case of W. T. Ramsay. They ruled in effect that they would look through highly artificial schemes involving transactions that had no basis in reality, thus thwarting the aim of eliminating tax. This has foxed all but one of the Rossminster schemes and left a lot of clients facing nasty assessments from the Rev-

At the outset of the semi-finals of the Benson and Hedges Cup, to be played at Lord's and Canterbury today, it would seem that Middlesex and Essex have a slight edge over Lancashire and Kent respectively. The record books suggest otherwise. The latter named are, of course, among the most successful counties in the history of limited-over cricket. Willis did the first damage. In his second over he had Butcher legbefore. In his next, a smart catch at short leg ended Emburey. But Gifford was the major danger. He had Gausing caught at silly poior, and in the same over bowled Edmoods behind his legs. That was 64 for eight, hope gone, and the rest did not take long. Gifford finished with six for 22. It would be wrong to say that the Warwickshire crowd did not enjoy it, but they were disappointed that it did not last a linle longer.

There were, looking back, two critical periods in this match. The first was when Gatting decided to put Warwickshire in. He no doubt thought that the Edgbastoe pitch would give his bowlers some early life. It certainly did, but unlike so

RACING Cauthen barges his way to a ban

By Michael Seely

Steve Canthen was given a 12-day suspension for reckless riding after finishing third on Hollywood Party in the Ward Hill Bunbury Cup at Newmarket yesterday. The stewards had no alternative but to invoke the automatic rule which entails this minimum sentence for a first offence of this nature during a season by a senior jockey. Cauthen's ban will run from July 14 to 25 inclusive. This means that he will miss his mount on Diamond Shoal for lan Balding in the King George

Testing the water with a minor tour

A member of the International Olympic Committee with extensive knowledge of the politics of the African continent posed the question recently: should the IOC be an active party to a policy which is as likely to push South Africa towards civil war as to encourage a route to cormality? It is a policy to which Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the IOC, must address himself the moment next year's Olympics are over, if not before.

in all areas of the political sporting debate attitudes are hardening, with the United Nations Committee on Aparthied demanding a code of cooduct which would enable the IOC to expel collaborators with South Africa, with the International Cricket Conference turning a deaf ear again to the South African Cricket Union, and Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke putting his Test players oo high-level social security as an antidote to temptation.

Catastrophic

Yet of only one thing can we be sure: the greater the polarization, the greater the probability that South Africa will be oudged ifnot into civil war then ioto the kind of limited strife experienced in Northern Ireland, which the British have come to accept almost as a fact of life but which much of the rest of the world views with incomprehension.

The awful dangers of the South African question is that so many who are involved in positions influence naively still consider it is a matter of who plays what with whom, rather than one of several fuses to something potentially catastrophic. A famous and far from unintelligent England Test cricketer of the 1950s said to me recently, in the intemperate language of the unexpurgated Nixon tapes, that as far as he was concerned the Olympics could happily sink without trace if that was the price of being able to play ball again with his white mates in South

Next week's MCC ballot - the effective result of which will be known from the post before the argument is aired at County Hall - will be possibly a watershed in the boycott business. A straw poll suggests that John Carlisle's Freedom in Sport body may get a simple majority in support of a Minor Counties standard tour, but not the necessary two thirds majority, and certainly nowhere near the 90 per cent of the general public suggested in the British poll cooducted on behalf of the South African Olympic Committee. But even a simple majority would put the MCC in a dilemma: should they move towards the view, to be heard widely outside the cautious committee rooms of the Test and County Cricket Board even at Lord's, that England should test the water, should call the bluff of the West Indies and Indian governments and see how far they are prepared to subordioate their popular cricketers, to political expediency, especially with India just having won the World Cup. MCC already have tacit West Indies Cricket Board assurance that a tour would not provoke a boycott of Lord's as a Test yeaue next summer. Just what would it provoke?

The extraordinary situation in danger of developing is of three Test match camps: the whites (England, Australia and New Zealand), the coloureds (West Indies, India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka) and a rebel South African circuit of mercenaries, many of them coloured. With the TCCB as well as Australia attempting to give Test cash guarantees to counteract possible ing home empty-handed last week, will probably intensify the subvention of leading West Indies and Indian players.

Personally, I am convinced that the best interests of the black man in South Africa, out just in sport, will in the long term be served by getting into the ioternational arena, a view for which I was termed "reactionary" by Victor Gbeho, of the United Nation's Committee on Apartheid and chairman of last week's conference in London on sanctions against apartheid.

In vain did one attempt to impress upon some of the delegates the sincerity of one's coocern for the black cause. But the committed political activist of the boycott movement will oot admit to, nor even contemplate, a middle course of limited readmission for South Africa where the special circumstances of an individual sport could be considered to justify it.

Confrontation

To my hypothetical question or whether the UN committee would approve of the readmission of any sport, where it might be almost exclusively to the black sportsman's advantage, Mr Gheho was adamant that nothing would be contemplated till all South African racial laws were abolished. This, he must surely recognize, cannot come about through confrontation, only negotiation. The boycott has, I believe, reached the limit of its political effectiveness.

Mr Gheho repeatedly quoted the principle of the Olympic spirit, yet the Olympic charter expressly forbids discrimination of a country's sportsmen on political grounds. He continually referred to South Africans as meaning exclusively whites, whereas my argument is that black South African sportsmen can give their country a new mixed-race image which can only accelerate a peaceful shift to social integration outside sport.

Some white South Africans are sincerely working towards this goal. and it is as myopic for militant left-wing anti-apartheid politicians - a role which lurks in any thinking man - to deny this is so as for white friends of South Africa to pretend either that sporting arguments can be resolved without reference to political conscience or that there do oot still exist many South Africans committed to maintaining the race laws.

There is just a slim hope that sport could still be an arena for reason rather than a whipping block for prejudice -even if South Africa themselves started it. That there is still a sporting case to be argued was illustrated for me last week when I found myself simultaneously quoted in support of opposing documents by Sir Shridath Ramphal, Commonwealth general secretary, and by John Carlisle. The argument was equally shown in Ron Pickering's BBC documentary, never mind that the editorial content was balanced 2-1 in support of the boycou and the camerawork unerringly engaged a single sympathy. Quite right. But the future is not just about sympathy, or ideology, but realism.

That requires recognition, for in-stance, of the fact that the boycott is the prime if not the only stable platform of the Organization of African Unity. Mr Samaranch is wrong to say that the South African issue must be settled within South Africa. It must be settled by the entire sporting fraternity on a continuous reappraisal of the facts, not on prejudice, of whatever hue.

GOLF: RYDER CUP PLACE IN DOUBT FOR DEFENDING OPEN CHAMPION

Unsure Watson teeters on a tightrope

By John Hennessy, Golf Correspondent

The United States team for the have been Curtis Strange. As it is, Ryder Cup match against Europe at Palm Beach Gardens, Florida in October may, after all, be fortified of by the presence of Tom Watson, who defends his Briosh Open otle at Royal Birkdale next week.

proviso. The winner of the United States PGA Championship in California next month is automati-cally given a place in the team, and if he happens not to be one of the first 12 players in the list, the man in twelfth place has to drop out. That is the tightrope Watson must walk in list to Wadkins; But that counts for the next few weeks.

Twice towards the end of a long day on Monday – two rounds were played in nine hours – Watson could have put all uncertainty behind him. He drove into a bush at the fifteenth on the Butler National place, the team will include only forwards and could not seek the seek of t course and could not save his par, then be missed a birdle putt from three feet at the seventeenth.

McCumber, meanwhile, had holed from 18 feet for a hirdle at at on 284, four under par, with rounds Peete (39), Gilder (29) and Strange Whereas some of the top Europeans of 68 and 71, and Watson on 285, (28) This number could, of course, with 75 and 72. A victory in rise to six after the PGA

Chicago would have lifted Watson championship.

- Ballesteros and Faldo, for instance — are girding their loins elsewhere with Birkdale in mind, an unusual to ninth place, and the player in the vulnerable twelfth posidon would Watson has displaced Hale Irwin.

The United States team, in order of qualification, will be: Lany Wadkins, Raymond Floyd, Tom

by the presence of Tom Watson, who defends his Bridsh Open o'tle at Royal Birkdale next week.

Watson needed to win the Western Open in Chicago on Monday – the final qualifying tournament for Ryder Cup points – to be sure of a place in the team, but he finished second, one stroke behind Mark McCumber.

This lifted him from fourteenth inc. This lifted him from fourteenth ing captain). John Miller, Lee place in the points list to twelfth, the Trevino, Bill Rogers and Larry lowest qualifying position for a 12-man team; but there is an important Open last month.

As it is, Watson owes his possible selection to a rule which debars Hal Sutton, in his third year as a professional. Sutton, who is widely regarded as a natural successor to the line of Palmer, Nicklaus and Watson, lies second in the money four survivors from the 1981 match: Floyd, Kite, Crenshaw and Watson. Wadkins, Zoeller and Morgan played in 1979, so there will be five newcomers to Ryder Cup compe-tition: Stadler, (aged 30), Hass (29),

Watson: must wait

Certainly they look less formidable than their predecessors. If you discount Watson's colossal contri-bution, the haul of classic victories is meagre. Floyd has had three, Wadkins, Zoeller and Stadler one each - Zoeller and Stadler in unconvincing style at Augusta.

Meanwhile, at home, the influence of next week's Open is bring felt at the Belfry, wher the State Express tournament starts today.

passage acclimatizing themselves for the Open. They include Gary Koch, Tim Simpson and Mike Sullivan from the United States. Rodger Davis from Australia, and Hsieh Yu-Sh from Taiwan. The principal home challengers will be Sam Torrance, Bernard Gallacher, Ken Brown, Ian Woosnam, Bernhard Langer and Tony Jackin. The tournament ends on Saturday. CHICAGO: Western Open (at US): 284: McCurter, 74, 71, 88, 71, 285: T Watton, 67.

Peete (39), Gilder (29) and Strange (28). This number could, of course, rise to six after the PGA championship.

All this might suggest that the American team will lack strength.

MOD. PENTATHLON

Nightingale grounded

By Michael Coleman

Pneumonia that has developed since a recent triathion contest has deprived Danny Nightingale of a modern pentathlon world cham-pionships at Warendorf, West Germany, from August 3 to 6.

Nightingale, the sole survivor of a gold-medal-winning team at the 1976 Montreal Olympics and the 1979 Spartakiede champion, raised official eyebrows last autumn by taking part in the Nice triathlen

A recent second attempt at this gruelling, non-step competition (open-water swimming, long cycle ride and a half or full marathon run), this time with permission proved costly to his health. If he still has the Olympics in mind Nightingale will have to fight hard to dislodge Richard Phelps (Gloscester), Steve Sowerby (Harrogate) and Michael Mumford (Godalming), who have been chosen for Warendorf, along with a newcomer, Jim Nowak, of the Royal Pheios, who narrowly won the open Services championships last week from the consistent Berlin-based Captain Mumford, is peaking to outstanding form. His recent 300 metres swim in 3 minutes 14.7 seconds was in world class.

The choice of Sowerby is a just reward for a tough competitor Nowak comes in for what might be reserve instead of the more fancied Peter Whiteside, who was involved in a recent feaving tragedy.

Mediterranean magic can carry you away Buying property abroad has always been a hazardous business. A different language, culture and legal system have all combined to make the property buyer cautious of parting with substantial sums of Finding good independent advice for buyers has always been difficult although in recent years it has not prevented thousands of Britains acquiring holiday and retirement homes, mainly along the Mediterranean coast in France and Spain, and to some extent along the Atlantic coast of Portugal.

Dealing with reputable British companies and agents has gone some of the way to take the uncertainty out of home buying on the Continent but it will always be worthwhile to do a little homework to ensure that the company selling you the property is actually entitled to sell.

Spain and Portugal are relative newcomers to the international property scene. After all Marbella, which has become popular among the jet set and nouveau riche in the last 20 years, was not much more than a glorified fishing village 40 years ago. Today developments

Manor with

Joints agents Michelmore Hughes and

Strutt & Parker are seeking offers of around £275,000 for what they describe as one of

Devon's finest manor houses. Dating from the fifteenth century, the

grade II listed house is situated in a secluded position on the edge of the Dartmoor National Park about 20 miles from Exeter. Constructed of local granite, the house has four reception rooms, playroom, breakfast room, seven main bedrooms, with four further bedrooms and three bathrooms. Holystreet Manor, as the house is known, is set in abound, offering the buyer every-thing from time share to villas and apartments. But for the past century the Côte d'Azur has been the most popular locations for wealthy Britons to establish a holiday home. ---

It was the British aristicracy which established the famous watering holes of the Côte d'Azur a hundred years ago. Cannes and Nice owe much of their popularity to the British rich, especially during the 1920s and 1930s. Much of that early popularity lives on, with wealthy Britons preferring France to Spain as the location for their holiday home.

Over the years a few British estate agents have established themselves on the coast using the basis of their London clients as a reason for opening an office in Nice or Cannes. Today few have survived the economic turmoil of the past decade.

One agency which has been operating on the coast for the past six years is SAFI (Société Anglo-Française Immobilière) run by an Englishman, Mr Stnart Baldock, who has lived and worked in France for the past 12 years.

inherent suspicion of lawyers, a feeling further exacerbated when dealing with a notaire, the continental equivalent of a conveyancing solicitor. Mr Baldock not only knows French property law, but can talk to the lawyers in their own language, SAFI offers a "handholding" service, taking the purchaser through each stage of the trans-

A member of the French real estate federation, SAFI is indemnified under the French estate agents guarantee fund. It can guide a buyer through the tangled web of French administration which governs building, planning and tax. It also offers a management and rental service.

The Côte d'Azur is still one of the world's most expensive holiday retreats and prices are set to climb still higher because of the Mitterrand government's restrictions on sending money abroad. This means that Frenchmen must find an outlet at home for spare money. Demand for holiday homes in Cannes and Antibes, as well as the surrounding areas, is strong from French and fnreigners alike.

At a new development in the hills above Canoes, for example, room apartment covering less than 1,000 sq ft of living accommodation, although with extensive balcony space. This particular scheme, Les Demeures de Cannes-Eden, has been built to high standards of design and construction and is set in delightful Farther in from the coast, property is cheaper. A new village development called Mougins le-Haut is located about 20 minutes away from Cannes in a rural setting. Some of the spartments have splendid views of sea and coast as well as the neighbouring countryside.

The developers have managed depart from the sprawl which often characterizes new schemes by laying out the village in a series of concentric circles. Complete with swimming pools, tennis courts, shaps and cafes, the development has a self-contained village atmosphere, although the claim that Mougins le-Haut is une nouvelle idee du village d'autrefois" may be stretching a point somewhat. Prices here start at £40,000 for a studio apartment and rise to £100,000 for a three-room flat.

fi anyone is going to write a successful play about young people it is Colin Finbow. Finbow, a former schoolteacher, has worked extensively with young people, particularly with the Children's Firm Unit. He certainly gets the best from his young cast for the Atternoon Theatre production, A FAIR IN THE PARK (Radio 4 3.02 pm), an appartment in improved there? experiment in improvised drama, devised by Mr Finbow. A group of young people visit a fair in search of exchannent and the play follows them as some make their clumsy and swikward amorous advances on the ghost train, play at being tough and generally have a good time - all captured splendidly by the authentic dialogue.

The papers

The Daily Ster attacks the "oil moguls" for "playing musical chairs" with petrol prices. "It is not free competition, but economic anarchy. And there is massive suspicion and cynicism throughout the country at this ludicrous dance of the billionaires." It urges the office of Fair Trading to intervene.

National Day

Malawi today celebrates its independence from Britain in 1964. The former protectorate of Nyasa-land became the independent state of Malawi after n five-year struggle under the leadership of Dr Hastings Banda. Dr Banda, who is thought to be in his eighties, has been the country's President ever since.
